The Federal Bureau of Investigation, U. S. Department of Justice, is charged with the duty of investigating violations of the laws of the United States and collecting evidence in cases in which the United States is or may be a party in interest.

The following list indicates some of the major violations over which the Bureau has investigative jurisdiction:-

National Motor Vehicle Theft Act
Interstate transportation of stolen property valued at $5,000 or more
National Bankruptcy Act
Interstate flight to avoid prosecution or testifying in certain cases
White Slave Traffic Act
Impersonation of Government Officials
Larceny of Goods in Interstate Commerce
Killing or Assaulting Federal Officer Cases involving transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of any persons who have been kidnaped
Extortion cases in which interstate commerce or interstate communication is an element
Theft, Embezzlement or Illegal Possession of Government Property
Antitrust Laws
Robbery of National Banks and Member Banks of Federal Reserve System National Bank and Federal Reserve Act Violations, such as embezzlement, abstraction or misapplication of funds
Crimes on any kind of Government reservation, including Indian Reservations or in any Government building or other Government property
Neutrality violations, including the shipment of arms to friendly nations
Frauds against the Government
Crimes in connection with Federal Penal and Correctional Institutions Perjury, embezzlement, or bribery in connection with Federal Statutes or officials
Crimes on the high seas
Federal Anti-Racketeering Statute
The location of persons who are fugitives from justice by reason of violations of the Federal Laws over which the Bureau has jurisdiction, of escaped Federal prisoners, and parole and probation violators.

The Bureau does not have investigative jurisdiction over the violations of Counterfeiting, Narcotic, Customs, Immigration, or Postal Laws.

Law enforcement officials possessing information concerning violations over which the Bureau has investigative jurisdiction are requested to promptly forward the same to the Special Agent in Charge of the nearest field office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, U. S. Department of Justice. The address of each field office of this Bureau appears on the inside back cover of this bulletin. Government Rate Collect telegrams or telephone calls will be accepted if information indicates that immediate action is necessary.

The F B I LAW ENFORCEMENT BULLETIN is published by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice each month. Its material is compiled for the assistance of all Law Enforcement Officials and is a current catalogue of continuous reference for the Law Enforcement Officers of the Nation.

The FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin has been published by the Federal Bureau of Investigation with the hope of assisting law enforcement officials and to encourage a comprehensive and enthusiastic cooperation among those engaged in combating crime. It has been the purpose of this publication to provide a clearing house for successful police methods and a disseminating medium for important police information. Likewise, the publication of material pertaining to scientific methods in crime detection and criminal apprehension has been intended to make readily available, material and data which might not otherwise be accessible.

Welcoming every opportunity to improve the Bulletin and thereby increasing its value to the law enforcement officer, we have considered every suggestion received concerning possible future practices designed to lend additional aid to the police officials.

In this connection the attention of the Bureau has been called to the desirability of printing the month and year of the publication of the issue of the FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin to which each fugitive entry appearing in the Bulletin relates. This suggestion has been adopted and each entry of the fugitive status of an individual appearing in this Bulletin indicates the month and year of the publication.

The adoption of this practice will enable officers who clip these entries and mount them on fingerprint cards to identify the exact Bulletin in which they appeared and to determine upon that basis whether the entry is of a recent character.

The interest of law enforcement officers in the Bulletin which has prompted their suggestions is deeply appreciated by me and I wish to extend again, to law enforcement officials everywhere, a sincere welcome to afford themselves of the advantages which may be obtained through their use of the FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin.

WHY COMPILE CRIME STATISTICS

The International Association of Chiefs of Police initiated in 1930 the project of compiling police statistics on a nation-wide basis. In August of that year this work was taken over by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and since that time the Bureau has collected and compiled for publication the various reports submitted by police agencies. The number of such agencies cooperating in this project has grown so that at the present time there is a total of 3,037 such agencies submitting crime data to the Bureau. The value of the data compiled by the Bureau becomes of greater importance as the number of contributing units increases. Agencies which are not now contributing monthly reports to the Bureau are urged to do so in order that the information gathered by the FBI may be as comprehensive as possible.

The system of uniform crime reporting was instituted in order to supply a long felt need for adequate police statistics compiled on a nation-wide basis. Prior to that time, the only data available were those based on local reports of police departments, and in a few instances certain State organizations were engaged in collecting information on crime conditions within the State. However, there existed no basis for comparisons of such data with the general crime conditions throughout the country. The police themselves are responsible through the International Association of Chiefs of Police for the institution of the system.

Successful law enforcement work is to a considerable extent dependent upon the opinion and cooperation of the public. In order to foster such opinion, it is necessary that certain basic types of information be disseminated among the public. The public should be informed concerning the enormity of police problems, and the achievements of the police in combating crime. It is to the advantage of all law enforcement officials to cooperate in the compilation of data which when properly presented will result in greater public support of law enforcement agencies. By the maintenance of adequate records, the police department can make available to the public such information as comparative figures showing the increased number of offenses, which increase may be caused by growth in population, and consequently call attention to the fact that a greater police personnel should be available to the particular department, the relationship between the average police personnel and the crime rate existing within the particular community, and the percentage of cleared cases for the local police department as compared to the average for other cities of the same size. If the individual department has few crimes, it is to its advantage to have such a report on file.

The contribution of crime data to a national clearing house is urged. The FBI is pleased to compile these statistics and to serve law enforcement officials in this respect. Those desiring to cooperate in the project can obtain the necessary supplies by communicating with the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, U. S. Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

THE YOUTH PROBLEM IN CRIME

This address delivered by Director J. Edgar Hoover, before the Thirtieth Annual Convention of the Boys' Clubs of America, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania on May 20, 1936, is being reproduced herein for interested law enforcement officers throughout the country who have made numerous requests for copies of the address.

"In appearing before you, the patrons and supporters of the Boys' Clubs of America, I hope that I am addressing the entire country. The problems of youth in crime which I shall discuss are not limited to sectional or local boundaries--they reach from border to border and coast to coast. They disclose a malign threat over every home in this nation. They reveal a tremendous responsibility which should be undertaken by our every citizen. They are the problems which confront us because of the awful fact that a great part of today's crime is committed by our youth.

"We have youth in crime because we have failed to provide youth with proper outlets and upbringing. Only in the rarest instances of diseased minds can we say that the first offender commits crimes out of sheer anti-social sentiments. Children are driven to crime because of deep-laid faults in society such as poverty, degeneracy and because their elders neglect them.

"When youth commits a crime, generally it is because older persons have committed a greater crime; it is because of laxity in early discipline; because of apathy on the part of parents and neglect by those of the community who should help the helpless; because of distorted views held by those who should know better and who have allowed adolescent minds to take a downward direction which can lead only to destruction.

"Today, as you know, 20% of our crime is the work of persons who have not yet even reached the voting age. This means that one-fifth of all murders, of arson, thievery, robbery, and the other malignant outrages against our commonwealth are committed by persons of immature bodies and immature minds, persons who should be reaching the threshold of useful life. However, this 20% falls tragically short of the ideal of American citizenship. It is not a pleasant picture. It is not a healthful outlook. It is not a normal condition when a nation such as America must bow under the disgrace of a set of circumstances in which one-fifth of our most deadly outlaws our murderers, our machine-gunning desperadoes, are little beyond childhood. It becomes incumbent upon all of us, therefore, to recognize and admit the causes for such scandalous conditions, and, reaching beyond, to search for the means by which they may be remedied.

"I believe that a prime factor in the disregard by youth for law lies in an equal or greater disrespect for law and order on the part of the adult of our generation. Seek to evade it though you may; seek to apologize; seek to excuse yourselves; nevertheless, upon the shoulders of grown-up America rests the burden for this condition. You may allege that youth has made a hero of the gangster. I insist that no youth ever developed an heroic ideal that was not first centered about his father or his mother, and when the youngster begins to show disrespect of law and order you can be sure that he learned something of that attitude at home, or because those in his home failed to keep him in the right company and isolated from bad examples.

"I have only to look at the stack of mail upon my desk since the capture of Alvin Karpis, Harry Campbell, William Mahan and Thomas H. Robinson, Jr., to realize that these blots of scum from the boiling pot of the underworld were looked upon by many persons as worthy of emulation. These correspondents express sorrow for the "poor" kidnappers, and regret that they must be placed behind bars. This is what usually happens when the Federal Bureau of Investigation eradicates what I prefer to call not "public enemies" but "public rats." Each of them has his audience like a motion picture star; each of them has his public; each of them has his great gathering of sentimental yammerheads, who utter remonstrances at his apprehension and detection. So long as that asinine behavior continues, I insist that the crime problem as affects youth today is also a crime problem involving the moronic adults of this country, who, through ill-considered actions, and idiotic idolatry of cowardly outlaws, develop an ever-increasing tendency toward crime by the youth of America.

"Our first problem, therefore, is to change this mistaken attitude; to carry on a campaign of education through which the unthinking American shall be forced to realize his disgrace in looking upon men of desperate crime as anything other than what they really are--the lowest dregs of society. This can be accomplished. Indeed, I take pleasure in informing you that while thousands expressed sorrow at the eradication of Dillinger, only hundreds lamented the capture of Alvin Karpis or Campbell or Mahan or Robinson. Our job is to steadily reduce that number until such maudlin sentiment is non-existent. Once this is done, we truly can throw our every effort into keeping boys and girls out of jail. We must work with a dual purpose, never failing to realize that while we combat the growth of criminal instincts in youth, we also must combat the inherent criminal worship in many of our men and women.

"We, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, are constantly working toward not only the capture and conviction of the enemies of society, but toward the building of a new viewpoint which we hope will result in fewer violators of the law. It was toward this end that, sometime ago, with the assistance of the law-enforcement agencies of America, we began the compilation of crime statistics, not as mere figures, but as guide posts in our endeavor to combat the degradation of otherwise good citizens. We have no desire to be known solely as hunters of men; we would much rather be looked upon as preventers of crime.

"Behind the spectacular efforts of the Bureau in its necessary campaigns against the more desperate of our outlaws, lies the never-failing desire to build a barrier between the law and its violation. We have no happier days in the Federal Bureau of Investigation than when vast throngs of boys under the guidance of friendly Special Agents are taken through the big building and are shown how we operate. We hope our young visitors will take pride in honesty rather than worship for the gangster thereafter. We hope to see the day when every law-enforcement officer in America will realize that the best weapon against crime is a feeling of confidence and friendship upon the part of every boy and girl in his neighborhood.

"It is our ideal to possess in the 37 nationally distributed field divisions of the Federal Bureau of Investigation a type of Special Agent whose history has been traced almost from babyhood to assure us that he is an upright, honest, courageous citizen. We are gratified that our files contain numerous letters from boys throughout America who want to so live that they, upon reaching maturity, can fulfill these obligations and become candidates for positions in this organization. I earnestly hope that the time will come when every local law-enforcement agency in America can arouse the same ambition in the boys of its community.

"Now, let us try to trace the growth of a criminal. True, there are instances where the following conditions do not apply. Their divergence, however, only proves the rule. All too often, we find that the 18, the 19, the 20-year-old offender has come from a family where selfishness is predominant. It may take the form of incompatibility leading to the divorce of the parents. It may be that parents are concerned only with their own pleasures, leaving the youth to drift as he will. Or it may be that they are poverty-ridden, ignorant people, not realizing their responsibilities. No matter what the foundation may be, it is almost inevitable that the attitude of the parents has a great bearing upon the future of the young criminal. We find that he has mixed with street-corner gangs at an age when his every attention should have been upon the furtherance of his education. We find, for instance, that practically every one of these public rats--"Baby Face" Nelson, John Dillinger, Alvin Karpis, "Pretty Boy" Floyd and numerous others--started their career of crime when they were little more than children, reared in neglect and poverty. We find them engaged in petty thefts, stealing tires from automobiles, acting as runners and delivery boys for bootleggers, engaging in robberies with older men at such ages as 14, and 15, and 16, a time at which, in the older and more conservative days of America, parents were accustomed to hold serious talks with their boys about their future, instilling into their immature and pliable minds the desire for honorable careers, for achievement, for accomplishment, for a future of honesty and worthwhile endeavor. But these boy criminals and thousands upon thousands of others like them were allowed to drift. Without remonstrance, they were permitted to gather in surroundings and companionships which bore no other possible future than that of outlawry. The saloon, the tavern, the pool hall, the gang at the corner, were places prohibited to the average youth, and infraction of these rules received well-deserved punishment. The sentimental theorists who dominate present-day child-guidance, however, believe that if a child is chastised, it may develop an inhibition or affect its later self-expression. So long as we fail to recognize that discipline is an essential part of human development, just so long will we have an aimless, directionless milling of the herd which can result only in mental panic and a thorough disregard for the rights of society to peace and order.

"It is time for America to resurrect that standard of discipline which did much to give this country its rugged, stalwart honesty of purpose, its determination, its achievements. I refer to that parental discipline and guidance which did so much to create law-abiding, successful, and forward-looking citizens. Today, however, that old-fashioned standard has been transformed into the wine card of the cocktail bar; into the sapient belief that an immature mind can be granted utter freedom of action without disastrous results. Its lesson has been supplanted by the dangerous one of the roadside tavern, the parked automobile upon a lonely road, by the constant apathy-engendered desire to have everything which youth wants, inevitably leading to a desire on the part of youth to get what it wants by fair means or foul.

"I hope you look upon me as old-fashioned in the enunciation of such beliefs. I much rather would be old-fashioned than to have upon my conscience the knowledge that some boy or some girl is condemned for year after year to live in the fetid atmosphere of a prison cell-block, identity destroyed, future forever marred, possibility of good citizenship severely blighted.

"Therefore, to return to our young criminal, we find that our youth has been handicapped from the beginning--that he had a bad start for which he is not responsible. If we try to tell youth today that crime does not pay, we are confronted with the question of why it does not pay. If we answer that the price of crime is prison, youth answers that it is easy to get probation, a pardon, or a parole. Youth, in spite of all its imagination, is literal. Youth is factual. Youth possesses a certain clarity of vision which often is lost in the more mature mind. One child in a neighborhood, who has learned the fallacy of our all-too-often mal-administered law-enforcement, can become a professor of law evasion for a hundred other neophytes in crime. Do not for a moment think that youth today knows nothing of the tricks by which it can avoid punishment. You must remember that civilization as it exists today is in direct conflict with the guiding impulses in the days of the cave men. Law as such is an artificial barrier reared by society for the protection of all against individual desires for the gratification of greed. Once we fail to teach reverence for these laws from infancy onward, and the reason for them, then indeed have we a recalcitrant and rebellious being whose very instinct inclines him toward crime.

"So what happens when youth, hampered by a lack of parental guidance, indulges in his first infraction? He receives the benefit of that most necessary and most laudatory system, known as probation. It is right that he should have probation. It is a crime for any child upon his first offense, to be incarcerated without a chance to reform, always excepting the very rare anti-social degenerate. But under our mal-administered system, we find that often the probation officer is ignorant; that he sometimes is himself a criminal; or that he is merely a political panderer willing to debauch the most sacred of tasks--that of the protection of our youth--merely to keep a job. And so in this modern Pilgrim's Progress toward the inevitable Slough of Despond, we find our child-criminal sunk deeper and deeper, first through poorly administered probation, then into reform schools which are not reform schools, but crucibles wherein boil the worst instincts of humanity and where innocence vanishes and insolence takes its place. We find him educated, step by step, not in law obedience but in law avoidance. We find him travelling from the reform school to the reformatory, from the reformatory to the prison with rarely a thought toward his true reformation, but always with the association of the vicious, the foul-minded, and the dangerous older criminal. At last, he himself becomes a professor of crime and he, like others, carries on his recruiting in an ever-widening circle which at last has brought us to the degrading position wherein each year in America 12,000 human beings - approximately one-fourth of those killed in battle during the World War - die by murder. Each year, the army of those who suffer from major crimes in the United States equals about one-third of the entire number of enlisted and drafted men who were summoned to protect America in the most crucial hour of our recent history - the World War.

"Furthermore, if our army of potential murderers and potential victims of murder were to be gathered into battalions and regiments they would out-number the peace-time Army and Naval forces of the United States by more than 200,000. If our entire band of criminals who operate constantly throughout the United States and against whom the law-enforcement agents of America are engaged in endless battle were to be assembled in one municipality it would be almost double the population of Philadelphia.

"Take that thought with you tonight, as you drive along the streets of your home city. Think of what it would mean if block after block, traffic light after traffic light, boulevard after boulevard, office building after office building, residence section stretching into other residence sections and beyond that into suburbs; if all of these should be peopled by robbers, by thieves, by firebugs, rapists, desperadoes and murderers. That is your present-day crime picture in America. Go further and remember that one-fifth of all of these--in every fifth house--would live some youth who should be looking forward to a life of accomplishment and worthwhile purpose but who is doomed to be nothing but prison fodder.

"What is the answer? The only answer can be that this condition constitutes a national crisis calling for a re-awakening of our patriotic instincts. It demands that we give of our time; that we give of our energy; that we contribute our best thought and endeavor toward the wiping out of conditions by which such an emergency is created. It means that our children must be taught that adventure lies not along the road of violation but that there are adventures in honest endeavor - greater ones, laudable ones, happy ones. They must be taught that there is only one road in the world of crime and that road travels downward to the swamps and morasses of suffering. They must be shown the true character of the criminal--that law infraction can lead only to disillusionment, to the weakening, physically and morally, of anyone who follows its teachings. They must be taught that a great career lies before them--more exciting than that of any criminal's life--the career of law-enforcement. They must be urged to fight for honesty and the thought be instilled within them that they are crusaders, the volunteers in a new battle for American character and integrity. They must be inculcated with a new political economy--the economy of political honesty.

"I would like to say, at this point, that I am not a critic of our political system. Our country lives by that system. It has prospered by it. In the final analysis, our greatest men--Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and all such national figures--were in politics. However, there is a sharp line of demarcation between the man in politics working always with America uppermost in his thoughts and the politician who thinks only about his job and cares not how he gets it. It is to this latter influence that much of today's crime problem can be traced. The political hanger-on, who wants a job as head of a police department for what he can get out of it; the crooked or ignorant vote-getter; the legislator who impedes law-enforcement for private or political reasons; the political parasite, who for selfish ends, wants to be a warden or a probation officer or a policeman or a detective or a guardian of paroled prisoners, is the type to which I refer. They are enemies of America and of every honest man in politics. They are bringing disrepute upon what should be the most laudable career to which any youth of America could aspire. These are the scuttling rats in the ship of politics, gnawing at its timbers, besmirching its ideals and doing their utmost to wreck our system of Government. Against them the many fine and honorable men, who, at a personal sacrifice to themselves, have entered political careers, are battling almost in vain. Why must this be so?

"Do you believe for a moment that the honest men in politics willingly suffer the degradation which these parasites bring upon them? Quite the opposite! Yet, time after time, they must stand impotent and watch the very persons whom they despise go before the people with all sorts of fantastic and bombastic schemes and be enthusiastically re-elected. I need not say that this statement does not refer to any party or any person. It refers to the American habit of enthusiasm for fine promises and failure to demand solid achievement from political self-seekers. You allow crooked people in your county, your city, and your community to come before you, often flaunting their crookedness, and you vote for them because they are shrewd, because they are clever or because they know how to be good campaigners and I submit that no elected crook ever willingly appointed an honest man. The same applies for the ignorant, for the mere office grabber, for the hanger-on, for the panderer and the man who wants a political position only because it is a job.

"Politics should not be concerned with jobs. It should be concerned wholly with principles and careers and until we offer careers, until we have in government men and women who have built their lives toward the honorable objective of serving their country in public positions, just so long will we have 12,000 murders a year; 1,500,000 major crimes and an army of malefactors who could march by this building for days on end without once the end being sighted.

"In this connection, I desire to draw a contrast--that of the achievements of Boys' Clubs under intelligent private direction and the lack of reformation accomplished by the average State institution. One turns out men; the other turns out more desperate criminals. Why is this so? The private institution often works with limited funds and against many obstacles; the state or community institution has heavy appropriations, full-time employees, large buildings and expansive grounds, yet it can do little more than send forth graduates of crime who are bound, in many instances, for that larger college known as the penitentiary. The answer is that private institutions are built with a desire for rehabilitation and accomplishment. The community institution has fallen into the grasping hands of the renegades of our political system, too often diverted to personal ends. That's the word for which I have been seeking - the renegade - the traitor, the vile enemy in our political family which seeks to disrupt our institutions of government; who knifes from within; who has only selfish purposes; who is the antagonist of everything that is honorable in our present-day form of Government. As such, he is a friend of crime and a barrier to law-enforcement. In his constant undermining of the finer ideals of our political system, he crawls into our court rooms; he assembles the crooked doctors to change the faces of our outlaws; he telephones the crooked lawyer to be on hand not only for the protection of the criminal but for the planning of the crime; he contacts the crooked aviator, the crooked shopkeeper, the crooked hotel and hide-out owner, the criminal gunsmith and every other member of that undercover army, the support by which crime lives, thrives and plunders. He sneaks into our reformatories; into our probation system; into our prisons, always with one foul purpose - the realization of personal gain at the expense of the commonwealth. He encourages suspended sentences. He is in the lobby rooms of legislatures to fight against the passage of proper laws for the hampering of criminal activities. He is the whining pleader before the elected judge, who, all too often, must answer to his command that the proper process of law be set aside and a criminal walk free from the court room. This is the man whom every high-minded person in politics abhors. This is the man whom it is our duty as American citizens to eradicate from our political picture, so that the honest man who so often thanklessly strives in your behalf and under the cloud of ignominy may be given a free hand and encouragement in the battle for the sanctity of our political system.

"Therefore, your campaign as the friend of the boy and girl in crime must be a constant one. We must carry education into the home. We must follow it into the school. A knowledge of the ill-effects of crime and the benefits of crime prevention should be required of every school teacher in America. What is the sense of spending hours in teaching our youth the history of America when many of those boys and girls are doomed to recall that history while sitting in a dank prison cell? Teachers should spend more time building the future of America, a future which can be made as clean, as high-minded, and as progressive as we, the people, desire it. We need a new viewpoint - not one of sentimentality, but of wise adjudication and administration. We need to know that the problem of crime is the problem of the family and we need above all things to incessantly instill in the pliable mind of youth the unalterable fact that seek as it will, try and twist and squirm though it may to beat society at the game of crime, it cannot win. To that end, we must have adequate avenues of detection, swift apprehension, and certain punishment. This does not mean that law-enforcement officers are eager to reap a harvest of arrests and prison sentences. Instead, the honest law-enforcement agencies of America are eager to see the day when anyone, youth or adult, faced with the temptation of crime, will be bolstered in his fight against it by the knowledge that if he commits this crime, he will be punished. There is no country in the world which has the proper law-enforcement that also has a real crime problem - the two cannot exist.

"We must strike on all fronts and particularly at the one which today is doing, perhaps, more than any other factor to undermine our national respect for law. I refer to that filth-encrusted scandal, the parole problem. I am not an opponent, but an advocate of the wise, intelligent administration of the highly laudable theory of parole. However, I do object, and object most strenuously, to the administration of that system as it is administered in some of our States. Practically every Special Agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation who has died on the field of battle against criminals, has been sent to his death by a gun in the hands of a paroled convict. I object to the fact that of the 13,010 most desperate, vicious enemies of society listed in the identification files of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, 3,734 of them have been touched by the magic wand of parole or pardon clemency. I equally protest against the fact that even the most honest advocates of the parole system have adopted an ostrich-like attitude in attempting to cover up atrocious defects.

"Time after time, we hear these men to whom I give all credit for sincerity and honesty of purpose, insist that only a certain per cent of parolees fail to live up to their promises. This is the group which brings about our secondary crimes. This is the group which heads our desperate gangs, which commits our kidnappings, our train robberies, our bank hold-ups, and our murders. These are post graduates of outlawry and professors of crime. These are the select minority which the parole champions dispose of so glibly. These are the men who, like a prisoner in Florida, committed two murders, received clemency for each, then committed a double murder to show how much he was reformed. Or like the man in Montana, who, when paroled, kidnapped the daughter of his benefactor and carried her away to become a white slave victim in a mountain cabin. Or the man in a middle western penitentiary who committed four murders, who was paroled four times, and then graduated into kidnapping. This group contains the John Dillingers, the "Baby Face" Nelsons, the "Pretty Boy" Floyds and the Alvin Karpises and Barker boys, each of whom piled murder upon murder until he became a national menace.

"Against this condition I protest with all the strength in my being and I say that our penal system cannot come from behind the cloud of disgrace until the sentimentalists and convict-indulging theorists recognize the fact that every time they allow such men to go free upon the streets, they are building an example to the youth of America that you can get away with crime; that you can beat our system of law-enforcement. I appeal to you as representative citizens of America to fight this problem into the open and to insist that this dangerous policy be sweepingly and constructively changed.

"To those who loyally and enthusiastically support the Boys' Clubs of America may I address a few words of admiration and sincere appreciation for the wonderful work which they are accomplishing. The up-building of the morale of the youth of our country through these organizations is of inestimable value, not only to those directly benefiting by the operations of the Boys' Clubs, but to each and every individual who loves his country and who is interested in its development and progress. The character and personality development which the Boys' Clubs of America accomplish will return manifold gold dividends throughout the generations to come. I know of no greater work, I know of no better work, I know of no work better entitled to receive the enthusiastic support of every man and woman interested in law-enforcement and our country's institutions."

RECENT EFFORTS AT MUTILATION PROVE FUTILE

There recently has been received in the Identification Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation the fingerprints in two specific cases wherein attempts were made to so mutilate the finger tips that clear and legible prints could not be taken. These efforts were apparently made in an attempt to defeat identification.

One case involved a fingerprint card submitted by officers of the Maryland State Police at Baltimore in the case of an individual who, at the time of his arrest, represented himself to be one Jack Mason. The finger impressions were readily classified and searched through the files of the Identification Division, and in less than two minutes were identified as being those of one Herbert Dornberg, FBI-1013041, who was possessed of a criminal record consisting of four arrests on various charges.

The second case involved a set of fingerprints received from the Police Department, Owensboro, Kentucky, reflecting the digital impressions of one Elijah Fossee, who was arrested there on May 7, 1936, on a charge of being drunk. Information received with the finger impressions indicated that the subject had rubbed his fingers on the brick wall of the county jail in an effort to so mutilate the ridges that legible impressions could not be taken. As in the other case, the efforts of the subject in this direction were entirely futile, and the fingerprint patterns were readily classified and searched through the files of the Identification Division. It was found that they were identical with those of one Elijah Fossee, FBI-194914, who was possessed of a criminal record consisting of six arrests since 1925. He had been sentenced to serve a term of one year at the State Penitentiary in Eddyville, Kentucky, on a charge of store-house breaking.

The two cases illustrate vividly how criminals fear the fingerprint science, and how they will resort to many schemes in an effort to defeat this method of identification. These cases also illustrate how ineffective efforts toward mutilation are, and how the subjects can be quickly and accurately identified in most cases despite these efforts at mutilation of their fingerprints.

WOMEN ARREST RECORDS

Data compiled from fingerprint records examined during the first quarter of 1936 disclosed that 7.3% of the arrest records examined were those of women.

MEDICOLEGAL ASPECTS OF ALCOHOLISM

The following article is published through the courtesy of the Wisconsin Medical Journal and the author F. L. Kozelka, Toxicologist, of the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wisconsin, in order to further acquaint law enforcement officers with the Medicolegal Aspects of Alcoholism.

"The tremendous increase of automotive traffic, with its greater speed, and, consequently, greatly increased potentialities for serious accidents, has thrown on the physician many more problems and greatly increased responsibilities in connection with the diagnosis of acute alcoholic intoxication and the determination of the relationship between the degree of intoxication and the actions of the individual. The diverse opinion of the investigators of the problem of alcoholism as to what constitutes drunkenness seems to center about the lack of a clearcut definition of the term. Carlson (1) suggests that 'alcoholic intoxication' should be defined as that degree of intoxication at which the individual becomes a nuisance or a danger to his fellowmen.

"The police courts have repeatedly maintained that the recognition of drunkenness is a simple matter because of the readily discernible symptoms, such as the odor of alcohol, dilated pupils, flushed face, staggering gait, confused thick speech, tachycardia, and boisterous, euphoric or abusive behavior. A person, however, may be under the influence of alcohol to an extent that seriously affects his faculties and behavior, especially in such a responsible position as driving an automobile, without exhibiting these commonly recognized symptoms of drunkenness and, conversely, an individual may exhibit any or all of these symptoms without being under the influence of alcohol, particularly after a severe shock as would occur in an automobile accident. Likewise, there are many individuals who have some acquired or congenital defect, or pathological condition, who continually exhibit some of the characteristics of alcoholic intoxication. As examples, one may cite individuals afflicted with neurological conditions which may cause ataxia, stuttering or stammering, or cases of vasomotor instability or acute febrile disturbances, which may cause dilated pupils, flushed face, tachycardia, or tremors.

"To be sure, the differentiation between all of these conditions and acute alcoholic intoxication may be made readily by the trained clinician in the majority of instances, but it is not always so easy for the medically untrained peace officer, especially in the borderline cases in which the symptoms exhibited are doubtful. In such instances, the alcoholic odor of the breath cannot be used as a criterion of the degree of intoxication because the intensity of the odor does not increase with the amount of alcohol ingested.

"A chemical examination of the urine or blood will, however, definitely establish whether alcohol has or has not been taken and approximately how much has been ingested. This test is of special value in cases where the individual continually exhibits some of these symptoms, because of some congenital or acquired defect, and has imbibed enough alcohol to give the characteristic alcoholic odor to the breath but not a sufficient amount to affect his faculties. Under the present methods of diagnosis, such an individual might be adjudged intoxicated. On the other hand, an individual imbibing a sufficient amount of alcohol to materially affect his reflex actions, but not enough to produce the more obvious symptoms of intoxication, might be declared sober. Such occurrences may be encountered frequently among automobile drivers. A drunken driver may exhibit marked signs of depression if left alone; however, a sudden stimulus, such as may occur in an automobile accident, may be sufficient to overcome to a certain extent the depressing effect of the alcohol, and the individual may appear fairly normal. It is a recognized fact that any strong stimulus tends to overcome depression.

"During the past year, many specimens of stomach contents or vomitus have been submitted to this laboratory for examination, from individuals involved in serious automobile accidents or from persons dying suddenly, in which alcohol was suspected of being the cause of death. While the establishment of the presence or absence of alcohol in such materials is of value in demonstrating that alcohol has or has not been taken, nevertheless the data obtained are worthless in estimating the degree of intoxication, since the alcohol present in the stomach must still be considered as being outside of the body. An accurate determination of the concentration of alcohol in the tissues or body fluids is the only satisfactory means of ascertaining the degree of alcoholic intoxication. Numerous experiments and clinical observations are on record which indicate that alcohol, like most other drugs, produces toxic effects in direct proportion to the quantity of the substance in the tissues and body fluids.

"It has been demonstrated that alcohol taken by mouth is rapidly absorbed; reaches its highest concentration in the blood within an hour after ingestion, the concentration then gradually diminishing as the alcohol is oxidized and excreted. The rate of oxidation is approximately 10 cubic centimeters per hour for the average individual, and less than 10 per cent is excreted by way of the lungs and kidneys. Newman and Cutting (2), working with two human subjects, found that they metabolized 0.167 cc. and 0.179 cc. per kilogram per hour, respectively, and that the rate of metabolism proceeded at a constant rate regardless of the concentration in the blood stream. The highest concentration attained is approximately the total amount of alcohol ingested, divided by the total weight, and if given in sufficient amount, will soon produce the characteristic subjective and objective effects.

"The reliability of using the results obtained from an analysis of the various body fluids, as an index of inebriety, has been the subject of a considerable amount of research. Those most commonly used are the blood and urine. Most investigators believe that the spinal fluid should yield a more reliable index because the concentration of alcohol in the spinal fluid should closely approximate that of the brain, and consequently reflect the degree of inebriety. In support of this contention, Gettler and Freireich (3) showed, in a series of cases coming to autopsy, that there was a more constant relationship between the alcoholic content of the brain and spinal fluid than between the brain and the blood, and suggest the use of a series of spinal fluid-brain ratios, ranging from 2.5 to 1.1, for estimating the amount of alcohol in the brain of living individuals, depending upon the concentration of alcohol found in the spinal fluid. If the concentration of alcohol in the spinal fluid is 0.03 to 0.1%, the result is divided by 2.5 to estimate the amount of alcohol in the brain. If the concentration in the spinal fluid is 0.5 to 0.7%, the result is divided by 1.1. They determined that the spinal fluid values more nearly approach those for the brain as the quantity in the latter organ increases. They also found that the alcoholic content of the blood cannot be correlated with that of the brain, being higher in some cases and lower in others. These data, however, throw little light on the problem, because the time intervals between the last imbibitions of alcohol and the determinations were not known, and evidently the wide variation found was due to the stage of absorption at which death occurred. The relationship of the alcoholic concentration of the spinal fluid (obtained by lumbar puncture) and the blood, was determined by Schumm and Fleischmann (4), Abramson and Linde (5), and Gettler and Freireich (3). They demonstrated that the alcoholic content of the lumbar fluid rises more slowly than that of the blood, and, during the period of decline, the alcohol in the spinal fluid remains higher than that in the blood.

"Mehrtens and Newman (6) corroborated these findings by single intravenous injections of alcohol. They observed that the curve of the alcohol level of the spinal fluid obtained by lumbar puncture attains the height of the diminishing alcohol level of the blood in about 80 minutes, reaches a maximum less than that of the blood, and during the period of decline remains higher than that of the blood. In the series of seven subjects investigated, the curves for the alcohol levels of the blood and lumbar fluid crossed between 80 and 120 minutes after injection. The signs of drunkenness in no way showed the lag that one might expect from the slow rise in the alcohol level of the lumbar fluid. The subject was invariably more intoxicated, judging from the actions and subjective symptoms, at the end of the injection when the alcohol of the blood was at its maximum than when the lumbar fluid reached its maximum. On the other hand, they found that the alcohol in the cisternal fluid rises promptly and closely approximates that in the blood. From their observations they concluded that alcoholic content of the cisternal fluid is a better index of intoxication than that of the lumbar fluid, while that of the blood is probably the best of all. Apparently an analysis of the spinal fluid has no particular advantage over the analysis of the blood.

Urine Analysis

"Blood samples are often difficult to procure and the question arises as to whether an analysis of urine gives as good an indication of intoxication as the alcoholic concentration in the blood. Miles (7) found that, during the first 20 or 30 minutes after ingestion, the urine alcohol is about the same, or a little higher, than in the blood; then for one hour or more it is 35 to 50 per cent higher. Southgate and Carter (8), working with human subjects, found that the ratio of alcoholic concentration in the blood to that in urine varied between 1.34 and 1.4 after one-half hour. The mean concentration ratio after one hour was 1.35.

They also observed that this ratio is not changed if the alcohol is taken on an empty stomach or preceded by the ingestion of food. Subsequent diuresis also did not alter the ratio. These results indicate that, from a practical standpoint, the analysis of urine is almost as satisfactory as of blood in estimating the degree of intoxication.

"Haggard and Greenberg (9) studied the solubility of alcohol in urine and blood and found that alcohol is more soluble in urine than in blood; the ratio of distribution at body temperature was 1.0 for the blood and 1.144 for the urine. They found the same distribution of the alcohol, after ingestion between arterial blood and urine obtained by catheterization. The apparent discrepancy between the results of Haggard and Greenberg and those of Miles and of Southgate and Carter, is due undoubtedly to the fact that the former investigators obtained their urine specimens by catheterization, and their ratio represents the distribution of alcohol between the two fluids at the time the urine was excreted and would be comparable to the ratio found during the first half hour after the alcohol was ingested. However, during the period (one to two hours after ingestion of alcohol) when the alcoholic concentration in the blood is decreasing, the ratio increases if the urine is permitted to accumulate in the bladder. This latter ratio was found by Miles and by Southgate and Carter.

"The relationship of the concentration of alcohol in the urine to the degree of intoxication of the subject was strikingly demonstrated by Bogen (10) who had the opportunity of observing 500 cases and correlating the symptoms, upon which the clinical diagnosis is usually based, with the alcoholic concentration in the urine. Those with an alcoholic concentration in the urine of 0 to 1 mg. per 1 cc. included not only a number who had not taken any alcohol but some who had imbibed small quantities. Forty per cent had the odor of alcohol on their breath but only a few showed the flushed face, dilated pupils, unsteady gait, or slurred or confused speech of alcoholic intoxication. In none was the combination of symptoms sufficiently marked to justify a diagnosis of drunkenness. In the group having an alcoholic concentration in the urine of from 1 to 2 mg. per 1 cc., the diagnosis of 'acute alcoholic intoxication' was made in over 50 per cent of the cases. The group having a concentration of from 2 to 3 mg. of alcohol in 1 cc. of urine showed an increase in the incidence of nearly all the symptoms of alcoholic intoxication. Fifteen per cent of these individuals were either in an alcoholic coma or were unable to stand or walk. The group having a concentration of from 3 to 4 mg. of alcohol in 1 cc. of urine contained only a few individuals who were not unmistakably intoxicated in the sense of the term, drunkenness. Above 4 mg. of alcohol per 1 cc. of urine, practically all the cases were in a state of alcoholic coma - the traditional 'dead drunk.' This level of alcohol approaches the lethal dose. These stages are well illustrated in Emerson's book on alcohol (11).

"Heise (12) studied the effects of small amounts of alcohol and found a measurable loss of efficiency and judgment in the operation of a typewriter even when the concentration of alcohol in the urine or blood did not exceed 0.02 per cent. In another series of experiments, he tested the effect of alcohol on automobile drivers and found that, without exception, these subjects were able to pass creditably the ordinary tests used to determine drunkenness and were able to perform the routine actions involved in driving. However, he found a definite variation from the normal in actions that had not become a habit, such as the avoidance of obstacles, backing the car, or any unusual action from one that was routinely used. In none of these subjects did the alcoholic concentration of the urine exceed 0.1 per cent. These results are in close agreement with those obtained by Carlson (1) who observed some functional impairment when the concentration of alcohol reached 1.17 mg. per cc.

The Criterion

"Turner (13), on the other hand, concludes that an individual is not intoxicated until the concentration of the alcohol in the blood ranges from 2 to 3 mg. per cc. However, he does not consider an individual intoxicated unless he is unable to talk and walk normally. If one is to subscribe to this interpretation, then a driver would not be adjudged intoxicated so long as he was able to stand, and no cognizance would be taken of his impaired faculties. Absolute helplessness should not be the criterion upon which we should convict a person indicted with operating a motor car while under the influence of intoxicating liquor. Other factors of the case being equal, the criterion should be whether or not he varies in a sufficient degree from his normal mental or physical state, as a result of the consumption of intoxicating beverages, to make him a menace to society.

"The contention that reaction time is lengthened and that the psycho-physiological functions of importance in motor car operation are impaired before the characteristic symptoms of intoxication are apparent, is further corroborated by Böhnsen and Vedel-Petersen (14). In their experiments on drivers of motor vehicles, they observed that alcohol tended to lower the grade of performance when 97 cc. of whisky was ingested. In this subclinical stage, when there is 1 mg. or less of alcohol in each cc. of blood, the changes produced in most cases are so slight as to be readily overlooked except by a very careful observer. Nevertheless, the effect is manifested in a blunting of the finer judgments and of observation, and usually results in a feeling of euphoria and increased confidence in one's ability, both physical and mental.

"It is a matter of common knowledge that the person accustomed to the use of alcohol can drink more and show less symptoms of toxicity than the person not so accustomed, although the mechanism of this phenomenon is not understood. It is commonly believed that a chronic alcoholic can tolerate a higher concentration of alcohol in the blood or tissues without exhibiting symptoms of intoxication. This belief, however, is not supported by experimental data. Pringsheim (15), working with rats and rabbits, found that habitues burn up the alcohol much faster (approximately two-thirds of the time) than normal animals; that normal animals reach a 66 per cent higher content of alcohol in the blood than habitues; that normal animals oxidize the same amount of alcohol each hour, while in habitues the oxidation is accelerated each succeeding hour. He also found that normal animals absorb 20 per cent more alcohol in the first two hours than do the habitues. The greater absorption and the lower oxidation are reasons why the alcoholic content of the body rises to a higher level in normal animals. Schweisheimer (16), investigating the alcoholic content of blood in human alcoholics and normal individuals, corroborated Pringsheim's results with animals. His results show that the maximum alcoholic content is higher in normal persons; that it reaches this maximum in from one and one-half to two hours, remains at this level for five hours, and then gradually diminishes, while in alcoholic persons it reaches its maximum more quickly, remains at the level for two hours and then subsides much more quickly. He concludes that tolerance is due to the decreased maximum alcohol zone which depends on a more rapid oxidation. He could find no proof of increased resistance toward alcohol. In general, similar results were obtained by Gettler and Freireich (17) with dogs. They poisoned dogs by daily administration of alcohol for periods ranging from six months to two years. In all cases (poisoned and normal dogs), intoxication (disturbed equilibrium) set in when the alcoholic content of the brain reached 0.25 per cent. They found, without exception, a smaller alcoholic content in the tissues and body fluids of chronic alcoholic dogs as compared to normal dogs, and concluded that the lower concentration is due to increased destruction of the alcohol by the tissues and that increased tolerance is due to more efficient oxidation. These data indicate that tolerance to alcohol consists mainly of the increased oxidation rate of the alcohol absorbed, but that the individual is always affected to about the same degree by the same concentration of alcohol in the blood, regardless of his previous habits or total amount of alcohol drunk.

"Since the concentration of alcohol in the urine and the blood is so consistently related to the degree of acute alcoholic intoxication and the consequent behavior of the individual, regardless of his previous habits, and since the diagnosis of drunkenness from the clinical condition alone is open to many criticisms and difficulties, a quantitative determination of the alcohol in urine or body fluid offers the only accurate solution to the problem of the diagnosis of alcoholism. It is not expected that this test should supersede entirely all the other clinical examinations, but should be interpreted in the light of all the other observations in the case. However, it can well be concluded that the alcoholic concentration in the urine and body fluids is the most reliable single factor in arriving at a correct conclusion as to the degree of intoxication of the individual, and intoxication should be defined more in terms of alcoholic content in the blood than in the ability to walk.

Summary

"From the available data it seems safe to conclude that:

"1. The clinical evidence alone is not an adequate criterion for the diagnosis of the degree of alcoholic intoxication.

"2. Tolerance to alcohol is due to more efficient oxidation and not to any increased resistance to it, i.e., the ability to tolerate higher concentrations in the blood and tissues without exhibiting the characteristic symptoms of intoxication.

"3. The psycho-physiological manifestations are directly related to the alcoholic content in the blood, regardless of the previous habits of the individual.

"4. There is a definite decrease in reaction time and loss of efficiency at lower levels of alcoholic concentration in the blood than is required to produce the characteristic symptoms of drunkenness.

"5. There is a definite relationship between the alcoholic concentration in the blood and the urine which is not altered by the rate of absorption or the degree of diuresis.

"6. The determination of the alcoholic content of the blood or urine offers a means of estimating the alcoholic content of the other."

THIRD FBI POLICE TRAINING SCHOOL

The Police Training Schools conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation have produced remarkable results in that a large percentage of the graduates of these schools, upon returning to their respective departments have been given promotions and, likewise, an opportunity to give the benefits of their training and experience to other members of their organizations. This is particularly gratifying to the Federal Bureau of Investigation because this is the primary objective of these schools as they are at present conducted.

Beginning July 20, 1936, the third session of the Police Training School will start and will continue for twelve weeks. Thirty-five representatives of local, county, and state law enforcement organizations will take this course of training. Instruction will be provided in a large number of subjects, including those that deal with scientific and technical subjects, those having to do with crime statistics records and reports, those which fall under the heading of firearms training and first aid, those under the heading of investigations, enforcement and regulatory procedure, and no less important, those having to do with the administration and organization of law enforcement agencies. A great deal of practical work and practical demonstrations will be included in the course of training and the entire facilities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's training schools will be made available during this course of instruction.

The observation has been made that those communities and sections which do not have properly trained and adequate law enforcement personnel will soon be learned by criminals and they will seek to establish their residences in such sections as a haven or refuge. The Bureau believes that the training which it provides, therefore, is helpful not only in the enforcement of laws, but also in the prevention and deterring of crime.

There is no expense whatsoever for the training or for the equipment used in connection, therewith. Pencils, notebooks, firearms and even the ammunition is furnished without any charge to those attending the schools. The only necessary expenses are living expenses while in Washington and transportation to and from the homes of those attending the school.

In order to attend a session of the Police Training School, it is necessary that the police department, sheriff's office, state police, or other law enforcement organization communicate with the Director of this Bureau advising that they desire to send a representative to take such a course of training. In the order in which these applications are received, the Bureau will give consideration to the applications and extend invitations to such law enforcement agencies to select one representative who is best qualified to take the training and then return to his own department to instruct the other members of that organization.

It is required that those who attend stipulate that they will attend for the full twelve weeks, that they will be prompt in reporting to classes, that they will earnestly cooperate during the course of the school to endeavor to get the greatest possible benefit from the course of training, that they will obey the rules of their own departments as to conduct, and discipline and such other rules as may be necessary for the proper conduct of a school of this type. Due to the fact that it is not desired to limit the value of this course of training by accepting those who are subject to an early retirement, it is required that those designated be less than forty-six years of age at the time they enter this school. The successful completion of this course will require a great deal of hard work from the students who attend and it should, therefore, appeal to those who are interested, serious-minded, and ambitious to improve themselves and others in their department, in the art and science of law enforcement.

Although selections have already been made of those who are to attend the third session of the Police Training School of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, this Bureau will be pleased to receive information from any law enforcement agency indicating its desire to send a representative to take this course of training. The Bureau will give as prompt consideration as is possible to these applications. If any additional information concerning the training is desired, the Bureau will be pleased, upon request, to send a booklet relative to its training schools to those who are interested. A communication should be addressed to the Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation, U. S. Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

A QUESTIONABLE PATTERN

The pattern which is submitted for discussion in this month's FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin probably cannot be considered in itself as a questionable pattern. However, it is reproduced in this issue for general discussion and as a preface to a discussion of a definitely questionable pattern of the same general type, which will be published in the August, 1936 Bulletin.

The question involved in this pattern is merely a matter of the extent or the distance which should be traced to determine whether any of the double loop patterns are inner, meeting or outer whorls. "Whorl tracing" is discussed in detail on pages 31 to 34 of the booklet entitled "Classification of Fingerprints" recently distributed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation to law enforcement officers. The text of this treatise reads, in part, as follows:

"The ridge emanating from the lower side or point of the left delta is traced toward the right delta until the point opposite or nearest the right delta is reached. The number of ridges between this point and the right delta are then counted."

The text then proceeds to define and describe inner, meeting and outer whorls.

The point involved in this case represents merely a discussion of the extent to which the ridge proceeding from the left delta should be traced. The text above indicates the ridge emanating from the lower side or point of the left delta is traced toward the right delta until the point opposite or nearest the right delta is reached. It is not intended that this ridge should be traced completely through or following a circuitous route. It is intended merely that the ridge be traced upon the upward thrust, which is usually present, until a point on this ridge proceeding upward is attained, which point is closest or nearest to the right delta. Any other procedure in the tracing of the ridge would necessitate a great deal of time in the following of the ridge around its loop.

Applying the foregoing rules to the pattern reproduced herein, it will be noted that the point where the tracing begins is represented by the letters "LD" to indicate the left delta. The actual tracing is represented by a heavy line. The tracing actually stops at the point marked "X", which is the closest point on the upward trend of this ridge to the right delta represented by the letters "RD".

As indicated above, a pattern of a decidedly questionable character will be reproduced next month to present this discussion further.

FINGERPRINTING BY RAILROAD POLICE

The Pennsylvania Railroad Police have been taking fingerprints in a general way for the past twenty years of criminals who were apprehended for major felonies. However, the operation was not made a general practice until October 1, 1935 when, at the suggestion of the Special Agent in Charge of the Pittsburgh Office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the officers assigned to the central region comprising the territory in and around Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, presented themselves at the Pittsburgh Office of the Bureau for general instructions in taking fingerprints.

There are one hundred thirty officers assigned to the central region of the Pennsylvania Railroad under the supervision of Mr. J. G. Sersch. Of this number ninety per cent received instructions in taking fingerprints by representatives of the Bureau field office at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The remaining ten per cent were instructed by other law enforcement agencies in the district. Two officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad Police attended the Fingerprint Identification School held at the Pittsburgh Office between April 20 and 24, 1936, by Inspector L. C. Schilder.

Since the inauguration of this activity by the Pennsylvania Railroad Police on October 1, 1935, the officers in the central region have taken and submitted over one thousand three hundred sixty-seven prints to the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Washington. The returns from these prints have indicated that about sixty per cent of the persons arrested had former criminal records.

The success obtained in this practice is well illustrated in the following cases:

January 4, 1936: Walter G. Smith. Arrested at Dennison, Ohio. Wanted for Auto Theft in the State of Illinois. Returned to Illinois authorities.

January 5, 1936: Lloyd Dale. Arrested at Warren, Ohio. Wanted for the murder of Officer R. D. Gordon of the Western Pacific Railroad at Stockton, California, on September 5, 1935. Convicted on a charge of murder in first degree, sentenced to death.

January 12, 1936: Will Rodgers, alias James Johnson, and Walter Lindsey: both colored, were arrested by officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad Police in the railroad yards at Orrville, Ohio. Fingerprints were taken and submitted to the Federal Bureau of Investigation at Washington, who notified the Columbus, Ohio authorities. Word was received the following day that both were wanted in connection with the murder of Joseph Clevenson of Columbus. Lindsey was indicted for first degree murder, which was later changed to manslaughter. On February 27, 1936, he was sentenced to serve 1 to 20 years by Honorable Judge D. Reynolds, Franklin County, Columbus, Ohio. Will Rodgers, alias James Johnson, who turned state's evidence, was released and further charges "Nolle prossed" and defendant discharged from custody April 27, 1936.

March 7, 1936: Sam Perry, arrested at Colliers, West Virginia, Subject of FBI 1074432, wanted as escaped prisoner from Wheeling, West Virginia. Released on March 8, 1936, by County authorities before receiving notification from Washington Bureau.

March 22, 1936: Lefton Hansley alias Harold Mason was removed from a mail train at Steubenville, Ohio. After his fingerprints were taken he confessed that he was wanted in New York City for murder. The New York authorities were notified and Mason was returned for trial. Disposition of case is unknown to date.

March 28, 1936: Clarence Osterman, Subject of FBI 367706 was arrested in Railroad yards at Carnegie, Pennsylvania. Fingerprints taken and forwarded to Federal Bureau of Investigation, Washington, D. C., and a notification was received that he was wanted by State authorities at Greencastle, Indiana. He was returned to Indiana, May 9, 1936, by officers from that State.

It is believed that if the officers of all the railroads in the United States adopt the practice of fingerprinting persons arrested, they will contribute largely to the efforts being exerted by other law enforcement agencies in combating crime, as such activity would unquestionably result in the apprehension of many wanted criminals in various parts of the country.

MUTILATION FAILS TO AVOID IDENTIFICATION

The photograph of Avery Simons, subject of Identification Order No. 1247, issued by the Federal Bureau of Investigation appeared on the cover of the Fugitives Wanted by Police Bulletin, issued June 1, 1935. Avery Simons was apprehended by Special Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation at Los Angeles, California, May 14, 1936.

It will be of interest to law enforcement officials and to identification officers in particular to know that it was found Simons had made an effort to so mutilate his finger tips that identification would be rendered difficult, if not impossible; however, his fingerprints were immediately taken and forwarded by air mail to the Identification Division of the Bureau in Washington, D. C., where it was found that in spite of the mutilation it was possible to conduct a search of the fingerprints in the files of the Identification Division and cause Simons' identification without difficulty. Such a result was important in this particular instance because Simons consistently and positively denied his identity, and further because his appearance had changed considerably since he was last photographed, and a positive identification could not be made from photographs.

OILING FIREARMS

The points requiring most frequent oiling on firearms are the parts where the slide and frame rub together on automatic pistols and the hub of the revolver cylinder, particularly the forward end.

IDENTIFYING THE UNKNOWN DEAD THROUGH FINGERPRINTS

The fingerprints of 2,758 deceased persons whose identities were unknown or in doubt were sent to the Federal Bureau of Investigation during the period from May 1, 1935, to May 1, 1936, by law enforcement agencies and coroners throughout the United States in an effort to prevent these deceased being buried as unknown dead.

Identifications were definitely established in 722 cases. The identifying data, such as addresses and names of the deceased's relatives were furnished to the contributing officials. The fingerprint contributors of 904 of the 2,758 were without any information relative to the identities of the deceased persons, whereas as to the other 1,854, their identities had been tentatively established. A comparison of the 2,758 sets of fingerprints with nearly 5,900,000 fingerprint records on file in the Identification Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation during this period effected positive identification of the 234 of the first group and 488 of the second group. In each instance where identifying information was available, it was promptly forwarded to the inquirers in order that the families and relatives of the deceased might be notified immediately.

During the month of April, 1936, the Bureau was in receipt of the fingerprint impressions of 225 deceased persons, the identities of 54 of whom were unknown to officials, while 171 were partially identified by the fingerprint contributors. The files of the Federal Bureau of Investigation disclosed the identities of 16 of the 54 unknown dead and made possible the positive identification of 45 of the deceased numbered among the 171 who were partially identified.

Death came to most of these 2,758 deceased in the routine course of life which might befall anybody, leaving their identities either entirely unknown or uncertainly established. Some were killed by trains or automobiles; several were found dead from natural, undetermined causes and misfortune.

A typical case in which reference to the Bureau's identification facilities afforded an identification of an unknown deceased person occurred when the fingerprints of an unknown dead man, who died at the Medical Center in Jersey City, New Jersey, were forwarded to the Bureau by the Police Department of that city. A search through the files of the Identification Division revealed this man to be an individual arrested by the Sheriff of Jersey City, New Jersey, on July 8, 1932, on a charge of trespassing on railroad property. All of the information appearing on the fingerprint card submitted in connection with that arrest was furnished to the Chief of Police of Jersey City as of possible assistance in locating the relatives of the deceased.

Another interesting identification occurred when the Police Department of Memphis, Tennessee, submitted the fingerprints of a young woman who had committed suicide while occupying a room in a house of assignation. When her fingerprints were searched through the files of the Identification Division her home address was revealed, together with her correct name, and information as to the whereabouts of her relatives was immediately furnished the authorities at Memphis, Tennessee.

Similarly, the Sheriff's Office at Stockton, California, submitted the fingerprints of an individual who was known to them under a certain name and who had met death through a train accident. When his fingerprints were searched through the files of the FBI, they were found to be identical with those of an individual who had previously been arrested in Burlington, New Jersey, and West Trenton, New Jersey. His correct name, which was entirely different from that under which he was known in California, was promptly furnished the Stockton, California, authorities.

Considering the number of identifications of deceased persons that are made, where the deceased has fingerprints on record, taken prior to death, is a forceful reminder that the Identification Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is maintained for this practical and humane service as well as for aid in the identification and apprehension of criminals.

FUGITIVE NOTATIONS

Replies to the invitation appearing in the January, 1936, issue of the Bulletin that law enforcement agencies advise whether they prefer arrangement of the fugitive notations appearing in the FBI Bulletins by alphabetical or fingerprint classification sequence have not been sufficient to warrant a change in the present alphabetical arrangement.

In order that the most satisfactory results may be obtained from the fugitive entries appearing in the FBI Bulletins it is believed that the notations should be clipped and pasted on fingerprint cards and placed in the fingerprint files of the various law enforcement agencies according to classification. If this procedure were followed each search of the fingerprint files of the law enforcement agencies would automatically effect a search against all such notices.

Law enforcement agencies are requested to advise the Bureau relative to all cases where the information appearing in the FBI Law Enforcement Bulletins is instrumental in effecting the identification of subjects as fugitives, in order that the Bureau may be informed as to the exact accomplishments of the Bulletin. Also, all wanted notices should be immediately cancelled by letter when the fugitive is apprehended or is no longer wanted.

FINGERPRINT CONTRIBUTORS

On June 15, 1936, there were 9,886 police departments, peace officers, and law enforcement agencies throughout the United States and foreign countries voluntarily contributing fingerprints to the FBI.

JOHN YATES, PAROLE VIOLATOR IDENTIFIED THROUGH FINGERPRINTS

Among law enforcement agencies served by the Federal Bureau of Investigation are special police departments of the several railway companies. Under date of October 18, 1925, the Special Agent of the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, Kansas City, Missouri, requested that a wanted notice be posted on the fingerprint card of one John Yates who had formerly served a two year sentence in the Missouri State Penitentiary, Jefferson City, Missouri, for the crime of grand larceny. Yates was wanted on charges of burglary and larceny in connection with a box car robbery at Columbus, Kansas, which occurred on the night of August 28, 1925.

A fingerprint card was received in the Federal Bureau of Investigation on May 10, 1926, from the Grayson County Identification Bureau, Denison, Texas, reflecting the arrest of one Jesse Williams on an investigation charge. The fingerprints of Williams, when searched through the files of the Identification Division, were found to be identical with those of Yates and, accordingly, a telegram was sent to the interested officials of the Railway Company on May 11, 1926.

A communication was subsequently received from the Special Agent of the Railway Company advising that Yates had pleaded guilty on May 21, 1926, to the charges of burglary, second degree, and grand larceny and was sentenced to terms of five to ten and one to five years, respectively, in the State Penitentiary, Lansing, Kansas, where he was received on June 5, 1926.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation received advice from the prison officials at Lansing, Kansas, on November 9, 1931, that Yates was wanted for violation of parole. An appropriate notation to that effect was made in the records of the Bureau. On April 29, 1936, a fingerprint card was received in the Bureau, reflecting the arrest of one Charley Evans by the Sheriff at Rock Island, Illinois, on April 23, 1936, on a charge of arson. A search of the identification files disclosed that Yates was again in custody, this time under the name of Evans. The Warden of the State Penitentiary at Lansing, Kansas, was immediately notified on April 30, 1936, by telegram of the identification effected by the technical experts of the Bureau.

GIOVANNI PICCOLO, AN APPLICANT FOR A BEVERAGE LICENSE, IDENTIFIED AS AN ESCAPED ALIEN

Several of the states, before issuing an alcoholic beverage license, require applicants to submit fingerprints which are forwarded to the Federal Bureau of Investigation for search through the criminal files of the Identification Division. Such was the case of Giovanni Piccolo who had furnished his fingerprints to the State Board of Equalization, Los Angeles, California, in connection with his application for an alcoholic beverage license.

The fingerprints of Piccolo, when searched through the criminal fingerprint files of the Bureau, were found to be identical with those of James Orlando, arrested by the Police Department at Schenectady, New York, on April 6, 1924, for violation of Section 1148, of the State Penal Laws, which charge was later changed to a vagrancy charge on which he received a suspended sentence. Orlando was also charged on that occasion with violation of Section 1897 of the State Penal Laws, which charge was disposed of by forfeiture of a $100 cash bail on April 22, 1924.

A fingerprint card was received in the Bureau on January 29, 1929, from the Police Department, Baltimore, Maryland, reflecting the arrest of Orlando as Tony Colehia, charged with violation of the Immigration Laws. Orlando was turned over to the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Labor as an alien for deportation. While in the city jail at Baltimore, Maryland, awaiting deportation, Orlando, feigning illness, was taken to the City Hospital, from which institution he escaped on March 6, 1930. The United States Immigration and Naturalization Service advised the Bureau on April 11, 1930, of Orlando's escape and requested to be notified in the event any information was subsequently received concerning his whereabouts.

The fingerprints of Giovanni Piccolo were received on April 29, 1936, from the State Board of Equalization, Los Angeles, California, and when found to be identical with those of Orlando, the District Director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service at Baltimore, Maryland, was immediately notified by telegram on April 30, 1936.

OFFENSES KNOWN TO THE POLICE, APRIL AND MAY, 1936.

Under the system of uniform crime reporting, there are forwarded each month to the FBI comprehensive data based on the number of offenses known to the police. Those data are published in the quarterly issues of the bulletin "Uniform Crime Reports." However, in order to make available current information relative to the fluctuation in the amount of crime in the United States, there is presented below a tabulation based on reports from police departments of 68 cities with more than 100,000 inhabitants for April and May, 1936. The figures are also presented in the form of daily averages and it is recommended that in view of the difference in the number of days in those two months that the daily averages be used in making comparisons in the amount of crime reported for those two months.

The compilation discloses increases in the daily average number of offenses of murder, rape, and aggravated assault. The remaining offense classes show decreases during May.

Daily average, offenses known to the police 68 cities over 100,000
