NOVEMBER 1, 1935

The Federal Bureau of Investigation, U. S. Department of Justice, is charged with the duty of investigating violations of the laws of the United States and collecting evidence in cases in which the United States is or may be a party in interest.

The following list indicates some of the major violations over which the Bureau has investigative jurisdiction:-

National Motor Vehicle Theft Act
Interstate transportation of stolen property valued at $5,000 or more
National Bankruptcy Act
Interstate flight to avoid prosecution or testifying in certain cases
White Slave Traffic Act
Impersonation of Government Officials
Larceny of Goods in Interstate Commerce
Killing or Assaulting Federal Officer Cases involving transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of any persons who have been kidnaped
Extortion cases in which interstate commerce or interstate communication is an element
Theft, Embezzlement or Illegal Possession of Government Property
Antitrust Laws
Robbery of National Banks and Member Banks of Federal Reserve System National Bank and Federal Reserve Act Violations, such as embezzlement, abstraction or misapplication of funds
Crimes on any kind of Government reservation, including Indian Reservations or in any Government building or other Government property
Neutrality violations, including the shipment of arms to friendly nations
Frauds against the Government
Crimes in connection with Federal Penal and Correctional Institutions Perjury, embezzlement, or bribery in connection with Federal Statutes or officials
Crimes on the high seas
Federal Anti-Racketeering Statute
The location of persons who are fugitives from justice by reason of violations of the Federal Laws over which the Bureau has jurisdiction, of escaped Federal prisoners, and parole and probation violators.

The Bureau does not have investigative jurisdiction over the violations of Counterfeiting, Narcotic, Customs, Immigration, or Postal Laws.

Law enforcement officials possessing information concerning violations over which the Bureau has investigative jurisdiction are requested to promptly forward the same to the Special Agent in Charge of the nearest field office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, U. S. Department of Justice. The address of each field office of this Bureau appears on the inside back cover of this bulletin. Government Rate Collect telegrams or telephone calls will be accepted if information indicates that immediate action is necessary.

The F B I LAW ENFORCEMENT BULLETIN is published by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice each month. Its material is compiled for the assistance of all Law Enforcement Officials and is a current catalogue of continuous reference for the Law Enforcement Officers of the Nation.

John Edgar Hoover, Director
Federal Bureau of Investigation
U. S. Department of Justice
Washington, D. C.

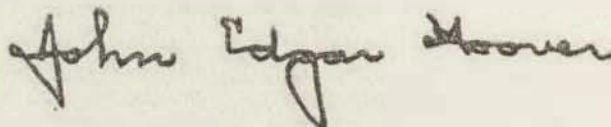

Law enforcement officers throughout the country are daily becoming more conscious of the great aid offered by science, in detecting crime and apprehending criminals. Many agencies are developing an investigative routine that places the criminal laboratory as an indispensable factor in the proper handling of a case.

With the rapid growth of scientific methods in detection, the burden of laboratory work upon the law enforcement agency constantly grows greater. Individual agencies, finding themselves hampered with lack of equipment and specially trained personnel, risk the danger of being subjected to the hazards of commercial crime laboratories and of experts whose testimony is readily available to anyone for hire.

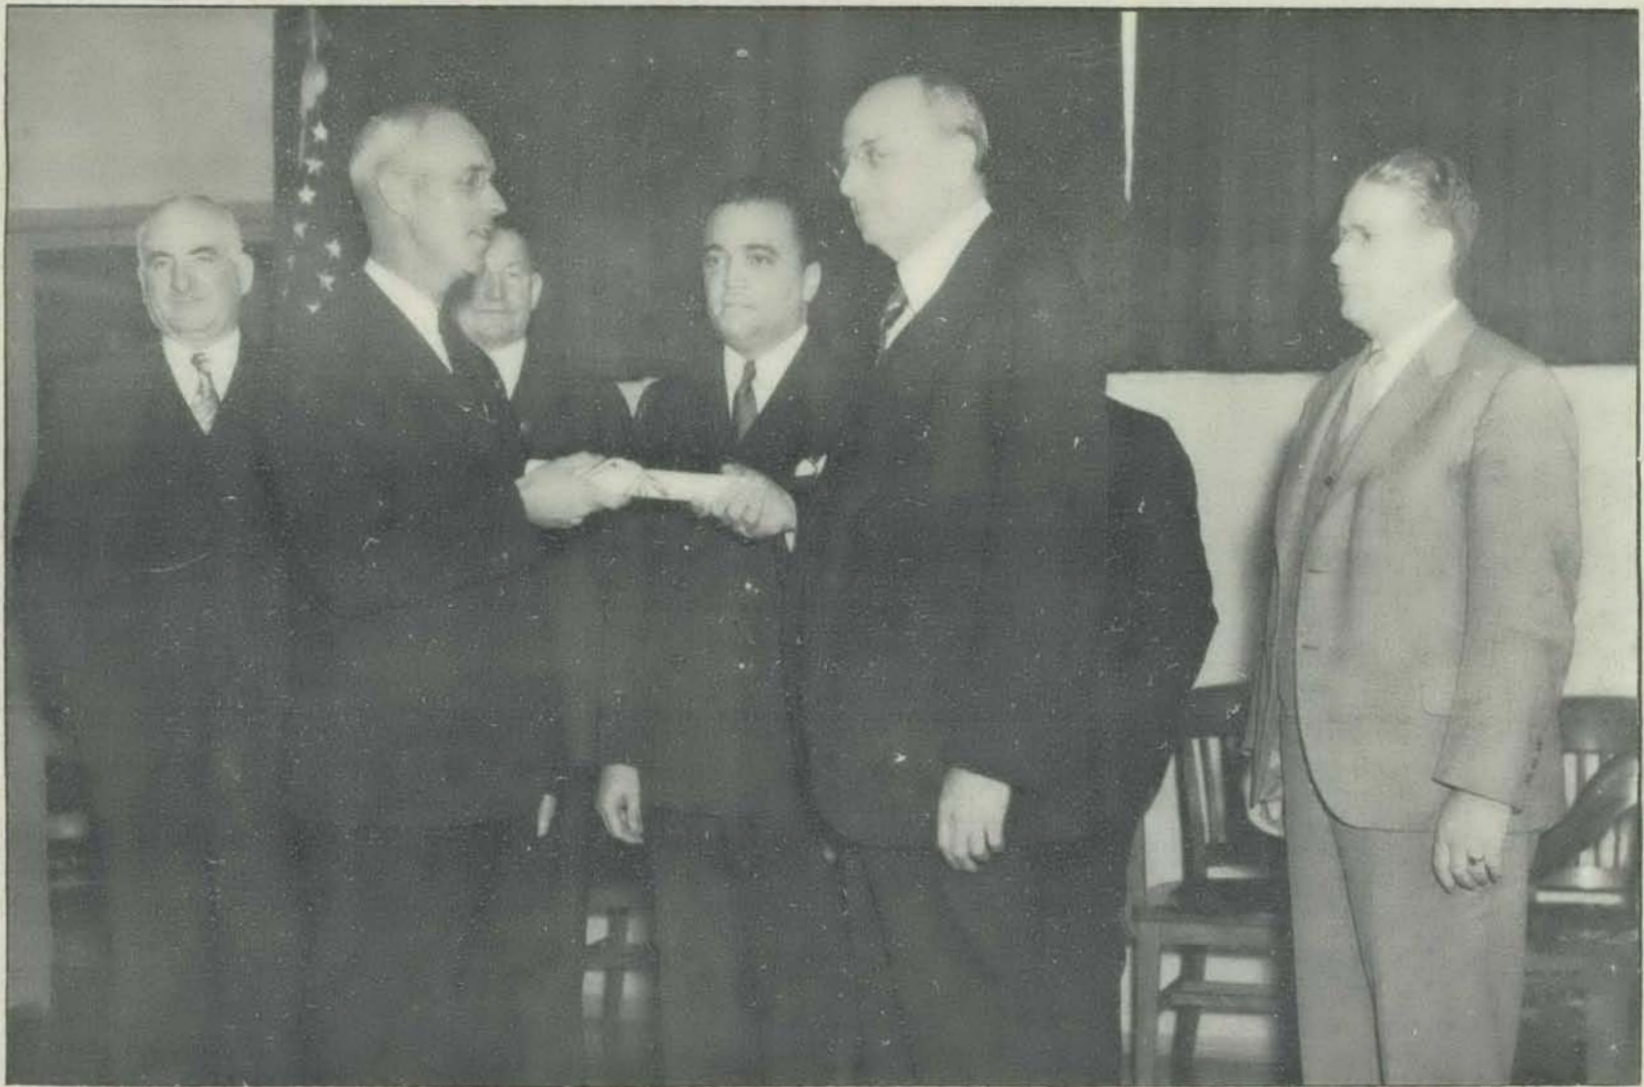

In keeping with the scientific approach to the solution of crime problems, the effort expended in the laboratory must be maintained on a correspondingly high level of certainty and integrity. The testimony of a technical expert must be unbiased; he must have no personal interest in the case and he should not be in the business of testifying for money.

The Technical Laboratory of the Federal Bureau of Investigation alleviates the danger of pseudo scientists and criminologists; here work scientists and experts who are interested only in learning the truth. The jeopardy of prejudicial experts is averted with the added assurance that the problems referred to the Federal Bureau of Investigation Technical Laboratory will have been thoroughly, and scientifically studied and reported.

No law enforcement officer in this country can deny the proven utility of the Federal Bureau of Investigation Identification Division; the same cooperation and aid is extended in the field of criminological science by the Bureau's Technical Laboratory. The greatest crime laboratory in the world stands ready to aid law enforcement officers everywhere. There are no fees. The reward is in having been able to give aid and assistance, in a spirit of cooperation, and in having contributed in sending a criminal to prison or freeing an innocent man.

Director.

Honorable Homer S. Cummings, Attorney General of the United States, presenting a diploma at the graduation exercises of the first F. B. I. Police Training School in the presence of Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Bureau, and members of the Advisory Committee of the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

EXERCISES MARKING TERMINATION OF FIRST FBI POLICE TRAINING SCHOOL

The first police training school conducted under the jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation was closed with appropriate exercises on October 19, 1935. It will be recalled that this school began on July 29, 1935 and was conducted for a period of twelve weeks. In a brief ceremony, 26 officers from federal, state, county and municipal police organizations who attended the school were awarded diplomas attesting to their completion of the course.

The Honorable Homer S. Cummings, the Attorney General of the United States, was the guest of honor and the principal speaker upon this occasion. He delivered an inspirational address and congratulated the members of the class upon the completion of their work. The diplomas were presented in the name of the Attorney General by Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, who presided at the closing ceremonies and who also delivered an address wherein he outlined the Bureau's plans for future schools and expressed the hope that the same high degree of cooperation and enthusiasm which marked the termination of the initial school would be observed in the future.

Brief talks also were given by Mr. Hugh H. Clegg, the Assistant Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in charge of the training school and the following members of the Advisory Board of the International Association of Chiefs of Police who collaborated with the Federal Bureau of Investigation in planning the school and in preparing its curriculum: Mr. Andrew J. Kavanaugh, President, Chairman Ex-Officio; Mr. Peter J. Siccardi, former President, Chairman of the Advisory Committee, Chief, Bergen County Police, Hackensack, New Jersey; Mr. John L. Sullivan, Chief of Police, Pittsfield, Massachusetts; and Edward J. Kelly, Superintendent of the Rhode Island State Police at Providence. A talk was also given by Captain James T. Sheehan of the Boston Police Department, who was elected President of the National Police Training School Associates, an organization formed by the officers who attended the school. The desirability of coordination, wider understanding, and better cooperation among law enforcement officers throughout the country was emphasized by these speakers. The address of Superintendent Kelly so aptly expressed the need for unity and cooperation that it is being quoted here to afford to law enforcement officers the opportunity of reading it.

"It may be presumed that every one of you officers, both local, state and national, realizes, at least in a general way, something of the purpose, methods and value of the organization you belong to. You know that society depends upon that organization for the preservation of law and order, for the safety of life and property, and for the continuance of accepted forms of modern government and civilization.

"Each and everyone knows these things in a general, abstract way, but do you have a clear-cut idea of the best way to attain the end in view? Do you always have a plan of operation that is sound and successful because it is based on fundamental principles? Do you know how to get the full measure of use and value out of the principles of unity and cooperation? Do you sometimes invite criticism and attacks on your organization by fostering or tolerating enemies, weaknesses and dangers within your organization? Do you know that the worst of our enemies are those we carry about with us in our own hearts - such as envy and jealousy? It is my purpose to emphasize these two base, destructive passions, because they seem to be ever present and to have destroyed or rendered ineffective more organizations, social, political, police and military, than any other agency. They are the twin sisters of destruction that cast sinister shadows over good men, fine organizations and noble institutions.

"They are strong, natural-born, unconverted sinners against unity and cooperation; against peace and harmony; against good will among men. They are breeders and spreaders of strife, hatred and revenge. They operate in the dark and scatter fear and uncertainty through many of our finest police organizations. They upset plans, undermine systems, cause confusion and injustice in the matter of rewards and punishments. They scoff at honest manly rivalry, and are finally unmasked and banished with great expense and loss of time and effort. If there is any truth or wisdom in this view of the probable cause or source of many serious police conflicts and difficulties, it is at once apparent that the remedy consists in the improvement of character, individual and collective. It would seem that police departments everywhere, and at all times, must place dispositions and character upon a higher pedestal than that occupied by brawn and skill.

"All along the line, there must be improvement in the selective and educational process. To attain anything like an approach to perfect coordination and cooperation among the men of a single police unit, or between the men of one police organization and another, we must fill all branches of the department with men whose great ambition is to serve God and country; men who scorn to rise by pulling others down; men above petty jealousy and envy. We must have broad men, tolerant men, men with good old-fashioned ideals, men who will serve humanity, enforce the laws, and guard the constitution, men whose patriotism and spirit of self-sacrifice outshines personal gain and selfish ambition, men who rejoice more in the capture of a criminal and the elimination of a crime than in the glaring newspaper headlines that proclaim the name of the police officer and accords him the credit for the arrest. We must have men who live to serve and serve to live. Daniel Webster the great statesman, lawyer and orator, of an earlier day, when asked what was the greatest thought that ever entered his mind, replied: "The thought of my personal responsibility to God." In these days of trial and unsettled ideas and ideals, it would be well if all our citizens, including all police in office, adopted this thought and assumed the responsibility that goes with it. Great miracles could be wrought if each and every member of our police organizations were actuated and sustained at all times by a fine sense of personal responsibility.

"In police work, as in other walks and departments of life and business, there is a proper field for personal pride and achievement, for wholesome rivalry and for personal gain and glory; but the really great end and aim of all police organizations must not be lost sight of - the elimination of criminals and the reduction of crime. After all, it does not matter so much whether officer X, Y or Z makes the arrest in any given case. The great point is that the arrest is made. There is one less criminal at large and all should rejoice, regardless of who gets the praise and credit for the capture.

"If a small town officer is fortunate enough to arrest a big, bad human wolf before the fast-approaching state or federal officer gets him, why harbor jealousy, why sulk and threaten? Have not the ends of justice been served? Has not the police organization functioned well and successfully? In a larger sense, doesn't the credit belong to the whole police organization - to all the forces of law and order - rather than to one member? Individual officers are but links in an organized police chain whose united strength may yet lift the burden of crime from the back of suffering humanity."

The Federal Bureau of Investigation will announce in the near future the opening of the second training school to be conducted for the benefit of police officers throughout the United States.

NATIONAL STOLEN PROPERTY ACT

On May 22, 1934, there was approved by the President, an Act of Congress providing for an extension of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act. This Act is referred to as the National Stolen Property Act, which makes it an offense to transport stolen property of the value of $5,000 or more from the state where it is stolen. The property included in this Act can be of almost any type or any counterfeit or spurious representation of any such type of property.

The important sections of the Act are set out as follows:

"Section 3. Whoever shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce any goods, wares, or merchandise, securities, or money, of the value of $5,000 or more theretofore stolen or taken feloniously by fraud or with intent to steal or purloin, knowing the same to have been stolen or taken, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both.

"Section 4. Whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, sell or dispose of any goods, wares, or merchandise, securities, or money of the value of $5,000 or more, or whoever shall pledge or accept as security for a loan any goods, wares, or merchandise, or securities of the value of $500 or more which, while moving in or constituting a part of interstate or foreign commerce, has been stolen or taken feloniously by fraud or with intent to steal or purloin, knowing the same to have been stolen or taken, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment of not more than ten years, or both.

"Section 6. Any person violating this Act may be punished in any district into or through which such goods, wares, or merchandise, or such securities or money, have been transported or removed.

"Section 7. Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal, modify, or amend any part of the Act of October 29, 1919 (ch.89), cited as the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice has jurisdiction in investigating cases falling within this Act, and any theft amounting to $5,000 or more should be reported to the Bureau office nearest the city where the theft takes place.

All thefts of property of the value of $5,000 or more should be reported to the Bureau's nearest office regardless of whether it has been determined that the property has been transported in interstate commerce. The Bureau will conduct a preliminary investigation to obtain the description of all property stolen, together with complete details of the modus operandi of the offense and any information as to the persons involved. If there is no showing of interstate transportation, active investigation will be suspended but the description of the property stolen will be transmitted to the office of the seat of Government of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Washington, D.C., where it will be recorded, particularly as to any identifying features, marks or numbers.

The Bureau cannot conduct an extensive investigation to locate the stolen property or take an active part in locating the thieves until there is evidence that stolen property of the value of $5,000 or more has been transported in interstate or foreign commerce, but by the recording of descriptive data concerning the stolen property in the files of the Bureau at Washington, D. C., information may be developed which will identify the stolen property at a later date.

Thefts of property of a value less than $5,000, where the facts indicate that a ring of thieves has been traveling through a certain section of the country looting particular types of concerns, should also be brought to the attention of the Bureau offices in the districts in which the thefts occur. In this regard the Act further provides that in the event a defendant is charged in the same indictment with two or more violations of this Act, then the aggregate value of all goods, wares, and merchandise, securities and money referred to in such indictment shall constitute the value thereof. In other words, if property stolen from different persons or concerns aggregates the value of $5,000, and such an amount is transported in interstate commerce, the transportation comes within the Act.

There is no provision in the Act to prosecute the person who steals the property but does not transport or cause the property to be transported unless the property is stolen while moving in or constituting a part of interstate or foreign commerce as stated in Section 4 of the Act, nor is it an offense under the Act for a person to sell the stolen property knowing it to have been stolen and transported in interstate or foreign commerce by another person. In both of these instances, however, the person who steals the property and the one who sells the stolen property can be charged with aiding and abetting an unlawful transportation or a conspiracy to violate the National Stolen Property Act.

CIVILIAN FINGERPRINTING IN KENYA COLONYBRITISH EAST AFRICA

The problem of identifying persons is world-wide and has been given serious consideration in many countries. The importance of civilian fingerprinting, as an aid in identification, is attracting nation-wide and enthusiastic reception.

A very interesting example of a civilian fingerprinting system has recently come to the attention of the FBI through Captain A. E. Imbert, Chief Registrar of Natives, and officer in charge of the Central Fingerprinting Bureau of Nairobi, Kenya Colony, British East Africa.

"In Africa," states Captain Imbert, "the governments have experienced difficulty in identifying natives. The illiterate African in the mass is an anonymous quantity away from his immediate neighborhood. In the African colonies it was necessary to take administrative measures to overcome this anonymity. Thus it is seen that in Africa there is the South African Pass systems, the Carnet d'Identitee in Madagascar, the Caderneta Indigena of Portuguese East Africa and the Kipande of Kenya Colony, or, as it is officially called, "The Native Registration System". The Kenya System of Registration was organized with the object of giving the previously anonymous native identification papers, which enable him to be identified when necessary, or to prove his identity when he wishes, as circumstances may necessitate.

"It is based partly on that inaugurated by the E. A. Military Labour Corps, during the War and partly on the South African organizations. It aims at maintaining that control of the individual native which rapidly changing conditions and especially the detribalisation of the junior section of the adult male population, had rendered necessary to the maintenance of Law and Order, but it has been particularly designed with a view to avoiding the numerous and somewhat irksome restrictions imposed by the South African system on their natives and with a view to the utmost freedom of the individual consistent with the maintenance of the necessary control.

"Between the year 1912 and the outbreak of the War in 1914, this Country, previously little known, began to develop somewhat rapidly. The natives, at that time, were definitely very backwards and in the remoter areas they were in fact still savages. They gradually came to work for the European, compelled thereto, at first by the need for money with which to pay Government taxes, later in order to gratify their newly acquired taste for clothing, agricultural implements and the thousand and one things that civilization has compelled humanity to require.

"In their original contact with the white man, they were, as is usual, suspicious or frankly afraid of him and so when engaging themselves to work for him, they gave him false names. If, perchance, the European was not to their liking, they merely deserted, frequently taking away such unconsidered trifles as appealed to them or which came their way. Once away, they were almost invariably untraceable, as was the stolen property.

"It was imperative therefore that some means should be devised wherewith to provide the native with a known, verifiable and traceable identity; all those were achieved by the introduction of Registration.

"The Registration System was inaugurated in Kenya in June, 1919, under the authority of the Native Registration Ordinance. Under this ordinance every male native upon reaching sixteen years of age is required to present himself for Registration. On registration he is fingerprinted, and his names and tribal particulars are entered upon the 'A', 'B', and 'C' certificates enclosed herewith.

"Certificate 'A', supported by an impression of his left thumb is issued to him and become his passport.

"He may not leave his Native Reserve without it and must obtain adequate endorsements from employers when entering or leaving such employer's service.

"Certificate 'B', accompanied by the relevant fingerprints is forwarded to this office for classification, search and record. These records are filed in 3 different collections, as follows:

- A. As a fingerprint collection according to the Galton-Henry formula, extended according to the Zimox system.
- B. A collection of 'B' certificates, for proof of Registration, filed numerically.
- C. A record card (as per specimen enclosed).

"The latter card records in addition to the man's number, his names, tribal particulars, fingerprint classification, payment of taxes, reference to crime, criminal Docket Number etc., etc., and last but not least all records of employment.

"These records are received from employers, on the monthly labour return (copy enclosed) which must be submitted each month by every employer of male natives.

"Certificate 'C' is retained in book form at the office of issue.

"With the above means, any native who may be wanted for any reason whatsoever, can be traced either in his Native Reserve or at his place of employment, in a very short time.

"Relatives are found, dead natives are identified, wanted criminals are traced, outstanding wage claims are settled, employers and others are put into touch with natives they wish to come in contact with, latent fingerprints left at scenes of important crimes are identified etc., etc., by means of this universal native registration."

BANK ROBBERS' MODUS OPERANDI

The following information is brought to the attention of all law enforcement officials with a view of promoting exchange of pertinent data looking to the apprehension of bank robbers. It is requested that modus operandi files be reviewed for the purpose of locating robberies in which a similar modus operandi was employed by the subjects as is set out in the following robberies.

In a condensed form, the following is a record of eight bank robberies which are believed to have been perpetrated by two individuals who have been designated by law enforcement agencies and newspapers as the "Mutt and Jeff Bank Robbers":

1. Two robbers entered the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, 48th and Western Branch, Los Angeles, California, on May 12, 1933, and secured $1,356.00. One of the robbers, a man of medium size, approached the manager, handed him a note and drew a blue steel .45 caliber gun from under his right arm, which he pointed at the manager, at the same time giving him a brief case and instructing him to "empty the till". The manager complied with these instructions, after which he was ordered, together with the other bank employees, to lie on the floor. The robbers left the bank and made their escape in a Ford V-8 sedan. The larger of the two individuals took no active part in the robbery and said nothing but stood in the middle of the lobby of the bank with a drawn blue steel gun, apparently for the purpose of preventing anyone from entering the bank and to terrorize the employees. After the No. 1 man had made his escape, this individual backed out of the bank and joined him in the automobile, which had been stolen from a parking lot about an hour prior to the robbery and which was abandoned about eight blocks from the bank.
2. On September 18, 1933, the Citizens National Trust and Savings Bank, Third and Catalina Branch, Los Angeles, California, was entered by two bandits and robbed of $2,000.00. In this robbery, both of the men walked to the manager's desk and commanded him to "stick them up", each drawing a blue steel gun at the time of the command. The No. 1 man, who was of medium size, then marched the manager to the back of the tellers' cages and made him stand facing the wall. The No. 2 man, a large individual, stood guard at the manager's desk. The smaller bandit cursed the stenographer and ordered her to empty the contents of a tin box, containing $1,000.00, into a paper shopping bag which he carried. The larger individual then walked into one of the tellers' cages and took $1,000.00, after which both bandits ran from the bank and made their escape in a Ford V-8 cabriolet which had been parked directly in front of the entrance. The Ford V-8 cabriolet had been stolen about one hour before the robbery and was abandoned within ten blocks of the bank.
3. A man of medium size with a blue steel automatic in his right hand entered the Melrose and Bronson Branch of the bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, Los Angeles, California, at about 2:45

P. M., February 5, 1934, and forced the manager and three employees to stand against the wall with their backs to the tellers' cages, while another bandit, who was a large individual, stood by the outer door armed with a blue steel automatic in each hand. The smaller bandit emptied the tills of $2,100.00, after which they both made their escape from the bank in a Ford coupe which had been stolen from a parking lot several hours prior to the robbery and which was abandoned about twelve blocks from the bank.

4. About 2:00 P. M., on April 26, 1934, two bandits entered the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, Washington-Vineyard Branch, Los Angeles, California, held up the employees and obtained $300.00. The No. 1 bandit, a medium size man, forced the manager and girl stenographer out of the cages and made them face the wall. He tried to get one girl employee to open the vault and when she would not, made her face the wall. The larger bandit took $300.00 from the till and followed the smaller individual from the bank. They made their escape in a Ford V-8 coupe which had been stolen from a parking lot and which was recovered a few blocks from the bank.
5. The Citizens National Trust and Savings Bank, Los Angeles, California, was robbed by two men on July 2, 1934, and $392.00 was taken. The No. 1 robber, a man of medium size, entered the bank alone, walked up to the teller's cage and declared, "This is a holdup", at which time he exhibited an automatic pistol. In a moment, the No. 2 bandit, a large individual, walked into the bank, covered the teller with an automatic pistol and forced him and the other employees to stand in the rear of the bank and face the wall. When the No. 1 bandit could not open the cage door, he vaulted over the railing into the cage and took the money out of the drawer. The employees were ordered, "Turn your mugs to the wall", and were asked, "Where do you keep the rest of your dough". The robbers also advised them, "Do not follow us or we will plug you". After the completion of the robbery, the bandits left the bank together and got into a Ford V-8 coupe which had been stolen about an hour before the robbery. They abandoned this automobile about ten blocks from the bank, where they were picked up by a man in a black sedan.
6. At 12:40 P. M., July 12, 1934, two bandits parked their automobile at the side of the Melbourne-Vermont Branch of the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, Los Angeles, California, after which they entered the bank and secured $1,408.00. The smaller bandit, who was the first to enter, vaulted over the railing into the private office of the manager, flourished an automatic pistol, grabbed the manager by the arm, jerked him around and said, "come on let's get going", and forced him at the point of the automatic to go back to the tellers' cages. The other bandit, a very large man, came into the bank and took a position in front of one of the tellers' cages, where he held an automatic in his left hand, pointed at the teller. He then pulled another automatic from his right hip pocket, pointed it at the employees and said, "This is a holdup". The smaller bandit then looted the cages, scooping up all the money in sight, while the larger man stood guard with the two guns. The smaller individual left the bank and started the automobile, after which the larger man backed out of the bank, got into the automobile and they quickly drove away. The automobile used by the bandits in making their escape was a Ford V-8 roadster which had been stolen from a parking lot during the morning of the day of the robbery and which was abandoned about ten blocks from the bank.

7. The Adams and Crenshaw Branch of the Security-First National Bank, Los Angeles, California, was robbed by two men on August 24, 1934, at 12:30 P. M., who obtained $750.00. In this robbery, one of the bandits, who was a large man, entered the bank first, drew two pistols and covered the employees, compelled a customer to face the wall with his hands up, and ordered the tellers to put the money on the counter and step back. He then continued to keep all parties covered while the other bandit, a small or medium size individual, with a .45 caliber pistol, scooped the money into a paper market bag. Both bandits then left the bank in a Ford V-8 roadster which had been stolen shortly before the robbery and which was abandoned a short distance from the bank.

8. A man of medium size entered the Sixth and Alexandria Branch of the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, Los Angeles, California, at 1:00 P. M., on June 4, 1935. He went straight to the manager's desk and shouted, "This is a holdup". At the same moment, one of the bandits, who was a very large man, walked to one of the tellers' cages, informing the teller that a holdup was in progress and instructing, "Turn your back and put your hands up". The smaller bandit then called the manager's attention to the fact that his partner had the teller covered, and marched the manager to the back of the cages, where he held open a large paper market bag which he had taken from under his arm, and ordered the manager to "open the money drawers and put everything in the bag". Upon being informed that the manager could not open one of the tellers' cages, the manager was cursed by the smaller bandit, who then marched him to the vault and made him open the door and give them all of the silver, nickels and pennies contained therein, the weight of which burst the bag. The bandits then forced one of the tellers to help them carry the loot from the bank. They made their escape in a Ford V-8 sedan which had been stolen from a parking lot shortly before the robbery and which was abandoned within ten blocks of the bank.

The following are composite descriptions of the two bandits, based upon the information furnished by the witnesses to the various robberies:

Robber Number One	Age	35 to 40 years
(Always took the lead	Height	5' 5" to 5' 7"
and went behind the	Weight	130 to 150 pounds
counter and	Hair	Dark brown or reddish collected the money.)	Eyes	Dark
	Complexion	Medium-dark
	Build	Medium to husky
	Clothing	Blue serge, blue overalls, brown suit, dark blue suit, light brown suit, tan summer suit, gray suit

Hat	Gray hat, dark, tan, dark cap, gray cap, Panama hat
Race	American
Arms	One blue steel .45 automatic and at times, two blue steel .45 automatics.

Robber Number Two (Always stood in the lobby of the bank as guard. Smoked a cigar while robbing one bank.)	Age	40 to 45 years
	Height	6' to 6' 2"
	Weight	160 to 225 pounds
	Hair	Black, dark, brown
	Eyes	Black, dark, brown, slanting, baggy
	Complexion	Dark, sun-tanned
	Build	Heavy, medium, powerful, stoop shoulders, short thick neck
	Clothing	Blue overalls, dark suit, brown suit, gray suit, sloppy, slouchy dresser, looked like rough cattle man
	Hat	Dark hat, dark cap, slouchy brown hat, Panama hat
	Arms	Blue steel automatic, blue steel revolver, and at times, two blue steel automatics
	Race	American with Indian or Mexican blood

It is believed that the same individuals were responsible for all of the above robberies, inasmuch as the descriptions of the robbers in each instance were similar and as a similar modus operandi was used in each robbery.

It is requested that in the event you possess any information as to robberies, current or past, in which a similar modus operandi was used, or as to known or suspected bank robbers answering the descriptions of the robbers in the above cases, you immediately communicate with the nearest field office of this Bureau.

The cooperation and assistance of all law enforcement officials in this connection will be greatly appreciated.

THE PHYSICIST AND SCIENTIFIC CRIME DETECTION

The physicist should be called to assist an investigating officer when it is important to determine the effect of any natural forces which have exercised any influence upon a matter within the criminal law. The well trained investigator is capable of determining effects, but the scientist can better observe them with more accuracy. This is especially true in cases requiring special knowledge, such as those involving calculations and the use of scientific appliances.

CIVIL IDENTIFICATION

As a result of considerable public interest in civil identification, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has established a civil file which on November 10, 1935, became the Civil Identification Section of its Identification Division, and has accepted for inclusion in it the fingerprint cards of law abiding citizens who wish to record their fingerprints for possible future reference as a protective measure. Since establishing this file, public interest has been aroused to the decided value of fingerprints in civil identification, to the extent that there is at the present time a program among a number of law enforcement agencies to encourage more widespread use of voluntary fingerprinting.

The FBI is keenly interested in this movement and has prepared a special card bearing the words "PERSONAL IDENTIFICATION" which is furnished to citizens who desire to forward their fingerprints to this file. Upon receipt of these fingerprints they are classified and placed in the civil identification file, entirely separate from the criminal records. These cards are not checked against the criminal file and it is not necessary that the fingerprints submitted for the Civil Identification Section be classified before they are mailed to the Bureau or that photographs accompany them.

Many persons have asked how the civil identification fingerprints might be taken. It has been suggested to those persons desiring to submit such fingerprints, that they call at their local police department and the department's experts will be pleased to assist them in properly taking the prints. Many police departments at this time have the personal identification blanks available and those who do not, may secure them from the FBI.

A distinction is made by the Bureau between fingerprints received for identification and fingerprints of applicants for positions which are forwarded by police and other official agencies. The fingerprints of applicants are usually taken on the criminal forms and stamped with the word "APPLICANT". When received, applicant fingerprints are searched through the criminal files and the contributing official is advised of any criminal record. These fingerprint cards are generally retained in the civil identification file although they are returned upon specific request.

It is believed that the Civil Identification Section will serve many useful purposes. The possible uses of fingerprints in commercial, civil and private life are extensive. They can be used in disputes involving identification. In the event of a catastrophe, identification is often difficult and it is well known that in train wrecks, casualties at sea and other disasters, there are often many unidentified dead whose identity could be established by means of fingerprint identification if there were original sets of the deceased's fingerprints on file.

It is believed also that the fingerprints of persons particularly fearing kidnaping, should be on file in the civil file. Further, persons who, by reasons of prominence are harassed by the activities of impersonators may insure identification through the use of fingerprints. It is thus possible for the real person to establish his true identity as against any impersonator. The fingerprints on file in the Civil Identification Section should be considered analogous to a signature which cannot be forged. No reflection of any kind attaches to the maintenance of this fingerprint record which is but an extension and improvement upon all prior known means of personal identification.

A number of police departments throughout the country maintain similar files for the use of local residents, and in many cases the citizens have arranged to keep one set of fingerprints on file at the police department and one at the FBI.

Civil fingerprinting provides the medium of a splendid opportunity for the local police department to have the leading citizens become acquainted with their department. It is found that the caliber of the people who may be expected to become and are interested in this movement are the higher type of citizens. Many of them have rarely ever been inside a police department and few know of the manner in which it works. Their initial introduction under favorable auspices, therefore, provides law enforcement officers with an opportunity to increase the influential citizen's respect for law enforcement work. The courteous and efficient handling of such contracts may instill in the citizen pride in his police department and be a great aid in bringing about greater cooperation with police efforts.

It is suggested that if a local police department is definitely committed to the desirability of encouraging voluntary fingerprinting and wishes to give whatever impetus to the movement as may lie within its power, that advantage be taken of this opportunity for developing public cooperation. This can be accomplished usually by announcement through the local press to the effect that the department will be glad to take and place on file the fingerprints of interested citizens, at the same time pointing out the advantages of civilian fingerprinting. After the announcement has been circulated freely the interest of civic organizations devoted to constructive programs is sometimes elicited. The prominent citizen who comes forward to record his prints acts as a spur to others. When a citizen learns that his eminently respectable neighbor has had his fingerprints taken, he too begins to give the idea serious consideration.

It should be noted that the FBI cannot cooperate in the civil identification activity with private individuals and organizations engaged in fingerprint work on a commercial basis. Similarly envelopes bearing the Government nonpostage privilege cannot be used to transmit civil prints to the Bureau. Special personal identification cards will be supplied to any law enforcement agency requesting them and, likewise, any private citizen will be furnished with such cards together with appropriate instructions for taking prints. All personal identification fingerprints received in the Bureau are answered to the official or citizen transmitting them.

THE USE OF ULTRA-VIOLET LIGHT IN THE EXAMINATION OF EVIDENCE

Ultra-violet light, sometimes called "black" light, has many useful applications in connection with the examination of forensic evidence, the particular advantage of this means of examination being that it does not destroy or alter the article examined other than to produce an aging effect on certain materials. On the other hand, there have been undue claims as to the effectiveness of this medium, arising to some extent from the success in one or a few extremely unusual cases which would lead one to believe that the method was infallible. These claims have in some instances resulted in the purchase of expensive equipment by agencies for many of its divisions which have no practical use for apparatus of the ultra-violet type. It is believed, therefore, that an impartial discussion of the possibilities of this method of examination will be of value, particularly to those who have the acquisition of such an apparatus under consideration.

Before discussing the applications of the ultra-violet rays, however, a brief explanation of their nature will be given in order that the effects produced by these rays may be more easily understood.

Visible light is only a small proportion of the total radiation which may come from some source such as a heated body or an electrical discharge. Radio waves, heat rays, infra-red rays, visible light, ultra-violet light, and X-rays, are all similar, differing only in their wave lengths; radio waves having the lowest frequency or rate of vibration, and X-rays the highest. Everyone is familiar with the fact that radio broadcasting stations transmit on different frequencies. The types of rays listed above are regions of different frequencies. The frequencies in the visible light region vary from the red light which includes the lower frequencies through the yellow, green and blue to the violet which comprises the higher frequencies. Ultra-violet means beyond the violet and this light includes the range of frequencies between the violet position of the visible light and the X-rays.

All materials absorb varying proportions of light waves of the different frequencies and many emit or re-emit certain radiations. When certain materials are placed in the ultra-violet light the radiation emitted are of frequencies constituting visible light, this phenomenon known as fluorescence.

The most convenient methods of producing ultra-violet rays are the arc light, using metal electrodes, and the mercury vapor lamp. Inasmuch as these sources also produce a considerable amount of visible light which would mask the fluorescence of objects under examination, it is essential that as much as possible of this visible light be eliminated. This is accomplished by means of a suitable glass filter which is opaque to visible light but permits the ultra-violet light to pass through the filter. In this connection, it should be noted that ordinary glass transmits only a small proportion of ultra-violet light and consequently the mercury vapor lamps manufactured for this purpose are made of quartz instead of glass.

As a note of warning, attention is here called to the fact that ultra-violet light contains rays that are injurious to the eyes and care should be taken that the light does not reach the eyes of the operator, keeping in mind the fact that this light also is reflected from polished surfaces. In some instances, it will prove desirable to wear proper goggles as a protection.

In order to make an examination with ultra-violet light properly, it is necessary that daylight and artificial light be excluded. While the ultra-violet lamp is provided with black curtains to exclude extraneous light, it is preferable to conduct the examination in a dark room in order that the visible light may be excluded and also that the eye may adapt itself to the subdued light; otherwise important effects will pass undetected.

The following discussion includes some of the applications of ultra-violet light which have been of particular value in connection with the work carried out in the Technical Laboratory of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

THE EXAMINATION OF DOCUMENTS

Various types of paper appear quite different when viewed under ultra-violet light, even though some of them appear very similar in daylight. Some papers appear to be very dark, while other types of paper give a rather bright fluorescence. This effect can be used to indicate that certain sheets of paper did not come from the same source, a question that may arise in deciding whether or not a sheet of paper found in possession of a suspect is similar to the paper constituting a questioned document such as an anonymous letter.

A particularly successful application of ultra-violet light has been the detection of erasures. Erasures modify the surface of the paper, thus affecting the sizing, and consequently the difference in the fluorescence of the paper where erasures have occurred is easily visible, the erased area being usually darker than the unaffected portion of the document. The deciphering of the erased writing, however, very frequently results in failure, although additional information can sometimes be obtained if the erasure is superficial.

Eradicated ink writing, that is, ink writing which has been made ordinarily invisible by chemical means such as the common ink eradicators can often be deciphered by means of ultra-violet light. In such cases, the ink is not removed from the paper; it is only bleached by the chemicals employed and consequently the constituents of the ink remain in the writing in an invisible form. This writing, however, frequently fluoresces or modifies the fluorescence of the paper and thus becomes visible. In many instances, it may be necessary to resort to photography in order to bring out the previously written words inasmuch as the photographic process will frequently record more than the eye can see.

Secret writing can often be deciphered, success being dependent upon two factors. Some secret inks fluoresce to a greater or less extent and are thus made visible. In addition, the fluorescence of the paper is sometimes modified by the presence of the writing which can be therefore read even though the secret ink itself does not exhibit fluorescence. As a result, it may easily happen that certain such inks may be visible when written on some types of paper and yet remain undetected on other types. This probably accounts for certain contradictions regarding the effectiveness of ultra-violet light encountered in the literature on this subject.

Some of the secret inks which can be deciphered are quinine, bisulphate, ferrous sulphate, potassium ferricyanide, milk, asperin, lemon juice and in some instances, saliva.

An envelope that has been steamed open can usually be detected as the moisture has affected the sizing. The paper usually appears darker where the seal has been steamed. Inasmuch as different adhesives fluoresce differently, re-sealing frequently becomes obvious when a different adhesive has been used.

Counterfeit money can be detected in some instances very readily. A genuine bill gives a reddish purple fluorescence on the white part of the face of the bill, while around the edges the paper appears rather white. The green ink on the back appears very dark, in fact, almost black. The paper of counterfeit bills frequently fluoresces very brightly and many such bills can be picked out immediately. The green ink on the back of counterfeits usually gives a light or dark gray fluorescence which, with a little practice, can be distinguished from the darker color of genuine bills. The method is not infallible, however, as some counterfeits have been encountered the fluorescence of which strongly resembled that of genuine bills. At the same time, it has been observed that some genuine bills, particularly badly worn ones, do not give the usual characteristic fluorescence.

Other applications have been mentioned in the literature relating to document examination, and although there has been no occasion to make these particular examinations in the Technical Laboratory, they are mentioned in the event such problems are encountered by others. These include such questions as the tampering of seals, the counterfeiting of stamps, the repair of rare and valuable stamps, the tampering of documents or packages sealed with sealing wax, and the counterfeiting or alteration of checks having an embodied color design.

STAINS

In rape cases, it is important that garments be examined for seminal stains. Such stains fluoresce very brightly in ultra-violet light, and although this fluorescence of a portion of a garment does not by any means prove that the stain is of seminal origin, in view of the fact that other substances give a similar fluorescence, nevertheless it is an invaluable means for selecting the portion of the garment to be tested by other methods. But for this preliminary examination, it would be necessary to make a water extract of the whole garment, a process which would enormously reduce the chances of success of the examination. By cutting out the portion or portions selected by the ultra-violet examination, the uncontaminated part of the garment is eliminated.

It is possible that a piece of cloth involved in a crime may be identified with another piece from which it was torn if the original intact piece had a fluorescent stain at the line of tear. Such evidence in conjunction with the shape of the tear would be conclusive.

While blood stains show no distinctive fluorescence directly, such a stain when treated with concentrated sulphuric acid gives an orange red fluorescence, changing to a brilliant red when treated with ammonia.

Examinations which have been found to be unsuccessful or unreliable include the detection of latent fingerprints, the direct detection of blood, the determination of the kind or age of inks and the detection of certain methods of secret writing.

In conclusion, mention may be made of other types of examination which, because of their rare occurrence or of their dissociation from criminal investigation, have not been mentioned in the literature on the subject. It is claimed that certain genuine gems, such as sapphires, can be distinguished from artificial stones. Diamonds, on the other hand, may not be distinguished, as some fluoresce brightly, whereas others do not.

Marks on the body, such as old scars, tattoo marks which have been eradicated, and marks caused by wrist watches and rings are discernable.

The examination of old documents, paints and ceramics with ultra-violet light have reportedly yielded valuable results.

No doubt other fields of research have been, or will be developed which will result in material assistance in activities directly or indirectly connected with criminal investigation.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

In the future, the criminal fingerprint cards furnished by the Federal Bureau of Investigation will contain space for the listing of the names of accomplices of subjects arrested. The Bureau believes that this information will be of great value to law enforcement agencies in the location of fugitives and the ascertaining of the identity of gangs.

The cooperation of all law enforcement officers in supplying this information is respectfully requested.

MISSING LINKS IN THE CHAIN OF EVIDENCE

In conducting an investigation the law enforcement officer must not only be alert in finding evidence that will lead to the apprehension of the culprit, but must give serious attention to collecting that evidence in such a manner that it is connected to the crime without any missing links. The following case is of particular interest, not only in illustrating the scientific approach of the expert who determined the fact that the lipstick found under the subject's fingernails was the same as on the lips of the deceased girl, but in pointing out the objections which the lipstick evidence and fingerprint identification were subjected to by defense counsel, when presented for introduction as evidence.

About the hour of midnight on November 15, 1931, a young lady eighteen years of age, was criminally assaulted and murdered in her bedroom at the home of her mother in Santa Fe. Near the same hour a brutal assault with a hammer was made upon the person of Oscar Churchill, night man at Andrews Garage on Water Street in the same city, the cash register of the garage looted, and a car belonging to the garage stolen.

A few hours thereafter, Thomas C. Johnson, a negro attendant at the garage in question, was arrested in Albuquerque in the stolen car. He readily admitted the assault upon Churchill, looting of the cash register, and theft of the automobile, but expressly denied all knowledge of the above-mentioned criminal assault and slaying. He was returned to Santa Fe and lodged in the penitentiary for safe-keeping.

The incriminatory facts developed against the defendant at the trial, are as follows: The mother of deceased was aroused by a bright light shining on her face about the time of the crime against her daughter. She proceeded from her bedroom through the living room to the door of the daughter's room. She found the room brightly lighted, and observed a stout, stockily built man, garbed in what she described as a "white and black striped" suit, standing beside her daughter's bed, with his back toward the mother. The mother screamed and apparently fainted, as she was able to recall nothing of what transpired thereafter. It was the theory of the state that she was struck with a green vase in the hands of defendant, broken fragments of which were found scattered over the living room and the daughter's bedroom. The mother bore evidences of having been struck with something. Fingerprints of defendant's left middle finger and right thumb were found at the scene of the crime, each on a separate and distinct fragment of this broken vase. The fragments were identified as parts of a glass vase belonging in the household.

Although not residing in the vicinity, defendant was found loitering in proximity to deceased's home one morning about 1:30 o'clock in early September preceding the tragedy, and was unable to give the officers accosting him a satisfactory explanation of his presence in the neighborhood. Again, he was seen late on the very night of the tragedy, not far from deceased's home, and, when asked by a witness, who knew and recognized him what he was doing over there "this time of night," he replied: "I got a job over here."

When arrested, defendant's outer garment was a suit of white and blue striped coveralls which the mother said resembled the suit worn by the man discovered in her daughter's bedroom. He wore underneath the coveralls, two top shirts, a pair of corduroy pants, shorts, and undershirt. He also had on his person a pocketknife such as could have been used to inflict the fatal wound--a stab through the left temple which fractured the skull and penetrated the brain. According to testimony in the case, defendant claimed it was a knife he used to repair tires, and stated that he had washed or cleaned it in his room. He admitted visiting his room just before fleeing Santa Fe in the stolen car. The deceased was shown to have bled freely as a result of the fatal wound and criminal assault. Different garments worn by defendant at the time of his arrest contained blood splashes, and his hands were bloody. These blood splashes were explained by him as having been received in dragging the body of Churchill from the scene of the assault in the garage to the place in the garage where his unconscious form was later discovered. It was a fact that Churchill had also bled freely from head injuries inflicted upon him by the hammer in defendant's hands.

The body of deceased when discovered disclosed that a strip of cloth had been forced into her mouth as a gag and tied behind her head, rendering it likely that the hands and nails of her assailant contacted the lips of the deceased. Saturday, the day before the homicide, deceased had purchased a tube of lipstick known as "Kiss-Proof". Upon the afternoon of November 15th, the date of the homicide, deceased was shown to have lipstick on her lips. A lipstick of the "Kiss-Proof" brand was taken from the drawer of the dresser in the mother's room on November 17th by one of the officers working on the case.

Solubility tests by an expert on slides used in connection with microscopic examinations disclosed that debris taken from underneath the finger nails of deceased and defendant each contained, in the clumps of skin particles found in said debris, a number of small bright carmine red particles, highly transparent, which did not dissolve in either the salt solution or water, and which were identical in color, appearance, and refraction. A like test of debris taken from underneath the expert's finger nails failed to disclose these bright carmine red particles. Continuing his test with the lipstick as a control, the expert made a light smear across his left hand, and rubbed the fingers on his right hand across the smear. Some eight hours later, after having washed his hands and had them in soapy water more than the ordinary number of times, and after having used his hands in rubbing hair tonic into his hair, he gave debris taken from underneath the nails of his fingers on the right hand the same test and found imbedded in the particles of skin a number of bright carmine red colored highly refractile particles which he described as identical in "color, shape, refraction and appearance" with those found in the debris taken from the nails of deceased and defendant.

In addition, this expert found in the debris from underneath deceased's nails several plant fibers colored blue, which he described as identical in appearance with blue cotton fibers scraped by him from the blue and white coveralls worn by defendant on the night in question.

The jury returned a verdict of murder and from a sentence pursuant thereto appeal followed. Several claims of error were relied upon by defendant in support of his demand for a new trial. Holding that the evidence upon which the jury based its verdict was substantial and that there was no error the court stated:

"Nor do we see error in the court's action in admitting in evidence the tube of lipstick. A lipstick and one other article of cosmetics of the kind shown to have been purchased by deceased on the day before the homicide were found in a dresser drawer in the bedroom of deceased's mother. It was "Kiss-Proof" lipstick, the kind deceased had purchased. When the tube of lipstick and a package of Peter Pan powder were exhibited to a witness on the stand, she identified them as two of the articles purchased by deceased in the witness' presence on the day before the homicide. We attach no particular weight to this identification in aid of admissibility, since no distinguishing marks were pointed out and any other purchases of the same articles bearing the identical trade-marks in packages of the same size would appear the same.

"When asked what deceased did with these purchases, the witness answered that she placed them in the dresser drawer where found. She also stated that she directed the officers to the place from which the articles were removed. Interrogated by defense counsel, she admitted she did not actually see deceased place them in the drawer. The deceased, her mother, and a female cousin of deceased eleven years of age, who had seen deceased make the purchase, and is the witness just referred to, were the only female occupants of the household. Only deceased, of the three occupants, used lipstick.

"The point to the objection, is, of course, that, since deceased's cousin admitted not having seen deceased place the lipstick in the dresser drawer, there was a missing link in the identification. We are satisfied it was sufficiently identified to entitle it to admission. The possibility that it was not the same lipstick purchased and used by deceased on the afternoon preceding the homicide was remote to say the least. Certainly the jury was entitled to say whether it was the same.

"The next claimed error was in the trial court's refusal to strike certain answers of the fingerprint expert, Powers. For a correct understanding of this ruling it is desirable to identify some of the exhibits employed in developing the fingerprint testimony. But, first, a word regarding the principal witnesses on this subject. They were Detective H. C. Martin of Santa Fe; J. H. McSparen, who took the photographs of the fingerprints from the fragments of a broken vase; R. E. Brunk, a convict from the State Penitentiary in charge of fingerprint work therein; and F. J. Powers, superintendent of the bureau of criminal identification of the police department of El Paso, Tex. The exhibits hereinafter referred to are all state's exhibits.

"Exhibit 1 was a fragment of the broken vase upon which as a result of the application by Detective Martin of fingerprint powder a questioned fingerprint of the right thumb developed. Exhibit 20 was a photographer's negative of Exhibit 1; Exhibit 25, a contact print of the negative Exhibit 20; and Exhibit 29, a photographic enlargement of Exhibit 20, changed by a photographic process from a negative into a positive for purposes of comparison.

"Exhibit 2 was another fragment of the broken vase upon which by a like application of fingerprint powder a questioned fingerprint of the left middle finger was developed. Exhibit 21 was a negative of Exhibit 2; Exhibit 24, a contact print of the negative, Exhibit 21; and Exhibit 26, a photographic enlargement of a print appearing on one portion of the Exhibit 21, likewise changed by a photographic process from a negative into a positive for purposes of comparison.

"Exhibit 23 was an original set of defendant's fingerprint impressions taken by the man in charge of fingerprint work at the State Penitentiary, the witness R. E. Brunk, on November 20, 1931, a few days following the homicide. Exhibit 27 was a photographic enlargement of the print of the left middle finger taken from Exhibit 23; and Exhibit 28, a photographic enlargement of the print of the right thumb taken from said Exhibit 23.

"The expert, Powers, compared the questioned fingerprint of the left middle finger, Exhibit 26, found on a piece of the vase, Exhibit 2, with the photographic enlargement of defendant's left middle finger. Exhibit 27, directed attention to many points of comparison, and declared the two fingerprints to be identical. A like result followed his comparison of the questioned fingerprint of the right thumb, Exhibit 29, found on a fragment of the broken vase. Exhibit 1, with the photographic enlargement of the print of defendant's right thumb, Exhibit 28, photographed from Exhibit 23.

"While the expert Powers was being questioned for purpose of identifying Exhibit 27, the photographic enlargement of defendant's left middle finger taken from Exhibit 23, in an answer he referred to this photographic enlargement, Exhibit 27, and as "A photographic enlargement of the left middle finger of the accused." And again, in referring to Exhibit 23, the witness designated it as "the set of fingerprint impressions of the accused." Defense counsel objected to these answers, and asked to have them withdrawn upon the ground that they involved an assumption by the witness that the original impressions from which the enlargements were made were fingerprints of the accused: that the assumption was hearsay testimony so far as this witness was concerned. A like objection was urged to the witness' designation of Exhibit 23 as a set of finger impressions "properly identified for comparison with the subject's fingerprints."

"If there had been any dispute about the genuineness of Exhibit 23, as furnishing a set of original fingerprints of the accused (the defendant,) of course, it would have been improper for the witness to assume this fact in issue. But there was no issue upon this point. Exhibit 23 was identified by witness Brunk as containing original impressions of defendant's fingerprints taken by him at the penitentiary on November 20th. When offered in evidence, defense counsel first object upon the ground that no proper foundation had been laid, and that the person who took the fingerprints had not properly connected the exhibit with the taking of defendant's fingerprints. After some argument, not appearing in the record, all protest against the introduction of the Exhibit was withdrawn, and it went into the record without objection.

"The controversy raged, not over any question whether the fingerprints on Exhibit 23 were those of defendant, but over the identity of the person who made the fingerprints on Exhibits 1 and 2, the broken bits of glass vase, found at the scene of the crime. Absent controversy over the genuineness of Exhibit 23, as defendant's original fingerprints, we see no error in having permitted the witness to assume in his answer, for the purpose of greater clarity before the jury, what was an undisputed and unopposed fact in the case."

PRECONCEIVED THEORIES

The preconceived theory is described by Dr. Hans Gross, internationally famous criminologist, as "the most deadly enemy of all inquiries." Against this hazard, there is but one safeguard and that is an open mind.

Today much attention is being directed to the development of a higher type personnel in law enforcement work. There is a need for men who are qualified with a thorough knowledge of human nature, natural ability, and indefatigable zeal, application and perseverance. Surveying the wide scope of work to be performed, we find that the ideal investigator must be a veritable model of human versatility. Approaching the problem as a matter of practicability, we know that the law enforcement administrator, lacking the ideal, must do the best with what he has available. Nevertheless if the investigator is trained to approach his problem with an open mind, that in itself will take the place of many other factors of the higher developed qualifications. The ideal investigator, with all of his natural abilities and training, would be faced with utter failure unless he were possessed of an open mind, when beginning an investigation.

An open mind is indispensable to a successful investigator. After his work is begun, next in importance is the need to discover the exact moment when he can form a definite opinion. If he should come to a definite conclusion too soon, a preconceived opinion may be formed, to which he will always be attached with more or less tenacity until he is forced to abandon it entirely. By this time, much may have been lost, the best clues may no longer be readily available or may even be gone beyond possible recovery. On the other hand, if the investigator misses the true moment for forming an opinion, the investigation becomes an aimless inquiry. It is impossible to lay down any general rule as to when the officer will find this true moment, but the investigator will always find it if he sets to work under the guidance of fixed and immutable principles, never losing sight of the fact that a definite opinion on a case should not be made suddenly, but should be arrived at as he advances step by step making use of such opinions as he may prudently form about phenomena, facts, and isolated events as they arise.

The complaint or information received by the investigating officer should be accepted momentarily as just a statement and not as fact until it has been proven to be a fact. If it is a major crime, the investigating officer must go to the scene immediately. In doing so, it is certain that there will be a great number of strong impressions bringing themselves to bear upon him. The task of evaluating them and bringing them to order in his mind will, in itself, be a difficult task. In addition, there will be many persons offering suggestions, theories and garbled statements which they honestly believe to be true. He cannot afford to dismiss them entirely because there may be some value to some of the statements. He may find it necessary to rely upon them later in developing leads that will aid him in forming an opinion or theory of the crime.

The investigating officer must guard against the unconscious formulation of a theory before arriving at the scene of a crime. This theory, although not void of foundation, has only a superficial connection with reality. This is brought about in this way: He may have already heard a similar story; perhaps he has formerly investigated a case that at the moment appears analagous. He may have an idea that certain chains of evidence tend to work out in certain case. These trends of thought racing through the mind, unless realized and guarded against, will prevent a free study of the details of the actual case. As a result, the association of ideas ends in a preconceived theory which neither rests upon juridical reasoning nor is justified by actual facts.

Gradually, as the investigation advances, certain opinions and ideas become separated and fixed. When a certain number of the ideas on the incidents of the case, considered individually, seem at length determined, the investigating officer will be situated to form a precise idea of the way in which everything has happened, even if only for a very general view. Working in this manner, the officer will be in a position to develop a provisional theory. To have set out the theory before having made an open-minded approach to the problem would have been superfluous and dangerous as well; superfluous because it may have to be changed any moment, dangerous because, with a prematurely formed plan, one can easily get off the track and proceed in the wrong direction, while in the interim before discovering the error, the investigator will have lost valuable time, and possibly the very evidence upon which the making of his case rests.

It is not contended in any manner that the investigating officer must not establish a plan of action when beginning his work, for without that he would only grope about, finding many things that were of no material effect and overlooking others that were of essence to the solution of his case. The decision of murder or suicide in a clear case is what is referred to as making a provisional classification, which is necessary to construct a plan for further investigation. It is well to point out, though, that there is a great difference between a provisional classification to guide inquiry, and a definite preconceived theory of a crime. For example, the investigator would be making a grave error if he proceeded upon a theory of suicide when there were any factors present that so much as intimated the possibility of a murder. In such cases, the investigation should be conducted with both suicide and murder in mind until either one or the other is established.

It happens at times that one suddenly perceives that he is following with exact minuteness a plan based upon data, the falsity of which should have become apparent long ago. This is exemplified by a case where the preconceived theory supposes a certain person to have been the perpetrator of a crime, and after having worked on this idea alone, it suddenly becomes evident that that person is innocent. Then the erring officer must carefully retrace and begin again. At this stage Dr. Gross states "This advice may seem pedantic: Yet, however unimportant an inquiry may be at each step (examination of witnesses, visits to localities, technical or expert reports, et cetera), the information upon which a theory has been based must be verified anew, to ascertain if the data remain unchanged, and, if not, in what way the theory must be modified."

In order to know exactly the attitude to be maintained toward what has passed, all of the circumstances of the crime must be clearly taken into account and submitted to strict, logical, unprejudiced examination from beginning to end. If at any part of the reconstruction it appears that something is not satisfactorily explained, pause where the logical sequence is broken, examine it with an open mind, and do not allow a preconceived theory to cause you to say that any unchecked questionable fact must be true because it fits your theory. One common error is to allow the investigator's prejudice to interfere with his reason. The investigator, if he prematurely forms a theory in his mind, has an unconscious tendency to attempt to distort the evidence until it fits his theory. Theories are very necessary to the successful investigation, but the successful investigator makes them his aids and not his master. Therefore, to guard against the danger of preconceived theories in investigation, one must reason carefully and with an open mind. If it is found that the facts fit the theory, all is well and good, but if they do not, then get a new theory and not new facts.

Wanted Notice of Joseph Hanley, Escaped - Kidnaper

JOSEPH HANLEY, with aliases: Joe Hanley, Joe Handley, Joseph Collier, Joe Collier, Joseph Coolsder, Joe Murphy, Joe Standing, was indicted by a Federal Grand Jury, Sioux City, Iowa on June 1, 1935, for the kidnaping and transporting in interstate commerce from Sioux City, Iowa, to a point near St. Paul, Minnesota, one, Ernest K. Newman, an armored car messenger on February 4, 1935. At that time, Newman was held up and robbed of approximately $1500.00 just as he arrived at the door of the Livestock National Bank, Sioux City, Iowa at 7:45 A.M. Four men participated in this kidnaping. Later Joe Hanley with Harold Harpin was found at Nishnabotna, Missouri on June 3, 1935, in possession of a stolen automobile. They were approached by Sheriff Herman G. Bredensteiner and his Deputy, Dean S. James of Rockport, Missouri, who began an examination of the automobile. While examining the automobile they were covered with guns by Hanley and Harpin, disarmed and forced to accompany Hanley and Harpin to a point near Sioux City, Nebraska. For this offense they were charged in a complaint filed before a United States Commissioner at Omaha, Nebraska on June 27, 1935, with a violation of the Federal Kidnaping Statute. On July 16, 1935, Hanley and Harpin were apprehended by the Sheriff at Goliad, Texas. Harpin was removed to Omaha, Nebraska in connection with the kidnaping complaint there, and Hanley was removed to Sioux City, Iowa for prosecution in the Newman case. Hanley was committed to the Woodbury County Jail at Sioux City, Iowa and effected his escape from that institution on August 5, 1935, after inducing a juvenile prisoner to assist him. He is presently at large and is the subject of Identification Order #1268 issued by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Hanley has an extensive criminal record and has served considerable time in prison at the State Reformatory, Anamosa, Iowa and State Prison at Stillwater, Minnesota. His criminal specialty is robbery. His family and relatives live at Sioux City, Iowa. He has traveled over most of the United States, having been in Roanoke, Virginia, Jacksonville, Florida and Los Angeles, California, and is quite familiar with the middle west. For a time he operated a hotel in Sioux City, Iowa.

It is requested that any information concerning the whereabouts of Hanley whose apprehension is being sought by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, be immediately reported to the Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice, Washington, D. C., or to the Special Agent in Charge of the office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation nearest your city.

ROBERT LEE COHEN - MISSING

On the afternoon of May 22, 1935, Robert Lee Cohen, left the Western High School, Washington, D. C., where he was attending classes, and presumably, in accordance with his usual custom, proceeded to the Key Bridge, Washington, D. C., where he endeavored to "thumb" a ride to his home in Lyon Park, Virginia. No friends saw Robert Cohen after he left Western High School and no word has since been received from him.

At the time the boy disappeared, he had in his possession, approximately $30.00 in cash, but had not made any preparation or given any indication that he intended to leave home, and had, in fact, informed a maid at his residence on the morning of May 22nd, when he was departing for school, that he would return home early in the afternoon in order to construct a pen for a new litter of puppies which had just arrived. He had not been the subject of any parental discipline and had been making satisfactory grades in high school. There appeared to be no indication of any discontent socially or scholastically on his part.

Robert Cohen had been operated on about a year prior to his disappearance for a tumor in his chest and had a large wound which had not completely healed at the time of his disappearance. He was not subject to fainting spells, dizziness, or mental lapses.

The following is a physical description of Robert Cohen at the time of his disappearance:

Name.....	Robert Lee Cohen
Age.....	17 years
Height.....	5'11½"
Weight.....	140 pounds
Hair.....	Light brown
Eyes.....	Blue
Scars.....	Large incision on chest (not completely healed); large appendectomy scar.
Clothing.....	Dark blue trousers, black shoes, white shirt, dark maroon pull-over sweater.

All law enforcement officials and agencies are requested to conduct any investigation looking toward the location of Cohen which seems advisable to them and to post a missing person's notice in their respective files. It is further requested that any information which may aid in ascertaining the present whereabouts of Robert Lee Cohen be reported to the Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

RUFUS WILSONVAGRANT ARRESTED IN WISCONSIN IDENTIFIED AS FUGITIVE FROM TEXAS AND APPREHENSION SECURED THROUGH BUREAU'S FINGERPRINT RECORDS

A request was received in the Federal Bureau of Investigation on June 8, 1935, from the Sheriff's Office, Waxahachie, Texas, that a wanted notice be placed in the Bureau's fingerprint files against the record of one Rufus Wilson whose apprehension was sought on two grand jury indictments charging him with burglary. This person had burglarized a private residence at Ennis, Texas, and his identity as the burglar had been definitely established by means of a latent fingerprint which he had left on a broken window pane when he made his entrance into the home. Upon the receipt of this information, a notice of his fugitive status was placed in the Bureau's Identification Division.

A fingerprint card, which was received in the Bureau on June 20, 1935, from the Police Department at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, reflected that one, Rufus Wilson, had been arrested by that Department on June 17, 1935, on a charge of vagrancy and had been sentenced to serve 90 days at the House of Correction commencing June 18, 1935. These fingerprints were searched through the Bureau's files and were found to be identical with those of the fugitive from Texas. Advice of this subject's arrest and sentence to the House of Correction at Milwaukee was furnished the Sheriff at Waxahachie, Texas. The Chief of Police at Milwaukee was informed of Wilson's complete criminal record, including, of course, the fact that he was wanted for the offense indicated.

The Sheriff of Waxahachie, Texas, communicated with the Bureau during the latter part of September, 1935, advising that the fugitive was returned to Waxahachie upon the completion of his sentence to the House of Correction at Milwaukee. In closing this letter the Sheriff stated: "I wish to thank the Federal Bureau of Investigation for the Sheriff's department of Ellis County for this wonderful service rendered in helping to apprehend this man. Had it not been for the Federal Bureau of Investigation this negro probably would never have been caught."

The above case is typical of the hundreds in which the Bureau's fingerprint files are instrumental in securing the apprehension of fugitives who are arrested in jurisdictions other than the particular jurisdiction in which they are wanted and on charges bearing no relationship to their fugitive status. It is particularly interesting to note in this case that less than two weeks elapsed between the date on which the Bureau received advice that Wilson was wanted at Waxahachie, Texas, and the date his fingerprints were received from Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in connection with his arrest in that city on a charge of vagrancy.

UNKNOWN MURDER VICTIM IDENTIFIED BY FINGERPRINTS

On the afternoon of June 24, 1935, a young boy who was going fishing on a drainage canal near Jennings, Louisiana, discovered the body of a dead man lying beside the canal levee. The Sheriff's Office at Jennings was notified at once, and after appropriate examinations were conducted it was found that the man's death had resulted from a blow with a blunt instrument which crushed his skull. All efforts to determine the deceased person's identity were unsuccessful, and, accordingly, fingerprints were taken and forwarded to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The deceased person's fingerprints were received in the Bureau on June 26, 1935, with a request that the Sheriff's Office be notified at once by telegram if any record of this person's identity should be disclosed through a search of the Bureau's files. The fingerprints were checked at once against the fingerprints on file in the Bureau's Identification Division and it was found that this person's name was Silas L. Scheffer, and that he had been received at the Southern Illinois Penitentiary, Menard, Illinois, in June, 1922, to serve a term of 1 to 5 years for bigamy.

Shortly after the fingerprints were received in the Bureau from the Sheriff's Office at Jennings, Louisiana, that Office was notified by telegram of the criminal record of this person. The officials of the Illinois Penitentiary were contacted and advice concerning the names and addresses of several of the deceased person's relatives was obtained.

This case illustrates the value of forwarding to the Bureau the fingerprints of all unidentified deceased persons. It is but one of many cases in which the Bureau's fingerprint records are instrumental in determining the identities of unknown deceased persons and locating relatives, so that the body may be disposed of properly and with due honors. It is worthy of note that during the month of August, 1935, the Bureau was successful in establishing the identities of 27 out of 92 unknown dead persons whose fingerprints were forwarded to the Bureau.

FINGERPRINT APPLICANTS

The discovery of the criminal records of 489 applicants for positions with Federal, State and Municipal organizations was made possible during September, 1935, by a comparison of the fingerprints of 6,514 applicants with the more than 5,304,000 criminal fingerprint records on file in the Identification Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.
