The Federal Bureau of Investigation, U. S. Department of Justice, is charged with the duty of investigating violations of the laws of the United States and collecting evidence in cases in which the United States is or may be a party in interest.

The following list indicates some of the major violations over which the Bureau has investigative jurisdiction:-

National Motor Vehicle Theft Act
Interstate transportation of stolen property valued at $5,000 or more
National Bankruptcy Act
Interstate flight to avoid prosecution or testifying in certain cases
White Slave Traffic Act
Impersonation of Government Officials
Larceny of Goods in Interstate Commerce
Killing or Assaulting Federal Officer
Cases involving transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of any persons who have been kidnaped
Extortion cases in which interstate commerce or interstate communication is an element
Theft, Embezzlement or Illegal Possession of Government Property
Antitrust Laws
Robbery of National Banks and Member Banks of Federal Reserve System
National Bank and Federal Reserve Act Violations, such as embezzlement, abstraction or misapplication of funds
Crimes on any kind of Government reservation, including Indian Reservations or in any Government building or other Government property
Neutrality violations, including the shipment of arms to friendly nations
Frauds against the Government
Crimes in connection with Federal Penal and Correctional Institutions
Perjury, embezzlement, or bribery in connection with Federal Statutes or officials
Crimes on the high seas
Federal Anti-Racketeering Statute
The location of persons who are fugitives from justice by reason of violations of the Federal Laws over which the Bureau has jurisdiction, of escaped Federal prisoners, and parole and probation violators.

The Bureau does not have investigative jurisdiction over the violations of Counterfeiting, Narcotic, Customs, Immigration, or Postal Laws.

Law enforcement officials possessing information concerning violations over which the Bureau has investigative jurisdiction are requested to promptly forward the same to the Special Agent in Charge of the nearest field office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, U. S. Department of Justice. The address of each field office of this Bureau appears on the inside back cover of this bulletin. Government Rate Collect telegrams or telephone calls will be accepted if information indicates that immediate action is necessary.

The FBI LAW ENFORCEMENT BULLETIN is published by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice each month. Its material is compiled for the assistance of all Law Enforcement Officials and is a current catalogue of continuous reference for the Law Enforcement Officers of the Nation.

In every program of law enforcement it should be obvious that every factor engaged in such a program should be manned by a personnel that is carefully selected, well adapted and adequately trained in the performance of their duties.

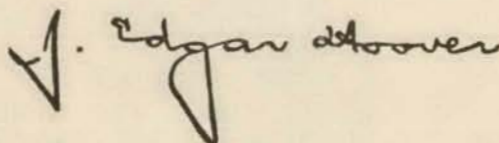

In July, 1935, the FBI began its program of inviting law enforcement organizations to select personnel to receive training in the FBI National Police Academy, in order that they might return to their departments after graduation to give the benefits of this instruction to other members of their organization. On October 10, 1936, when the third session held its graduating exercises, the total graduates numbered eighty-one carefully selected officers who represent the same number of police organizations in thirty-nine states and one territory.

The value of this training may be more readily realized when it is observed that the total number of officers, who are now placed in a position to benefit from their trained representatives, is 52,895 and the total population residing within the jurisdictions covered by these eighty-one organizations and thereby receiving more efficient protection is 66,378,966.

We have endeavored to make our training practical and at the same time stimulate thought processes, for we know that no single formula will solve all law enforcement problems and that no two crimes are identical. We recognize that a principal object in the field of police training is to obtain a capably directed organization of honest, hard working, well adapted officers who have common sense, good judgment and trained intelligence.

Through carefully trained law enforcement personnel there will develop a greater sense of security and safety in the minds of the citizenry, for they may then be assured of protection by an efficient law enforcement organization.

Any law enforcement organization desiring to designate a representative to take this course of training, which is offered without any cost for the instruction, may place itself in line for consideration by writing this Bureau of such desire. It is planned to hold three sessions of the FBI National Police Academy during the year 1937.

EXERCISES TERMINATING THE THIRD FBI NATIONAL POLICE ACADEMY

The third session of the FBI National Police Academy was concluded with appropriate exercises on October 10, 1936. In a graduation ceremony in the training school rooms of the Federal Bureau of Investigation at Washington, presided over by Director John Edgar Hoover, thirty-four law enforcement officials received diplomas.

The training course afforded the members of the class was initiated on July 20, 1936, and consisted of lectures and practical demonstrations by experts connected with the FBI, in addition to lectures by outstanding criminologists and police officials from throughout the country.

The following officers received diplomas:

Walter F. Anderson, Winston-Salem, North Carolina, Police Department
 Frank M. Bemus, Denver, Colorado, Police Department
 Thomas P. Boustead, Rockford, Illinois, Police Department
 Charles Burmeister, Madison, Wisconsin, Police Department
 E. G. Christensen, Kansas State Highway Patrol
 E. P. Clark, Missouri State Highway Patrol
 Louis J. Claude, Rochester, Minnesota, Police Department
 Edward C. Cupit, Nevada State Police
 Stanley D. Decker, Pasadena, California, Police Department
 Jesse G. DeLoach, Waycross, Georgia, Police Department
 Robert D. Drennan, El Paso, Texas, Police Department
 Ellis H. Duckett, Richmond, Indiana, Police Department
 George R. Folds, Augusta, Georgia, Police Department
 F. Clarke Grady, Great Falls, Montana, Police Department
 Leroy L. Greely, Portland, Maine, Police Department
 Walter D. Guiney, Manchester, New Hampshire, Police Department
 J. W. Hernandez, Puerto Rico Insular Police
 Dana Jewell, Portland, Oregon, Police Department
 W. M. Kelly, Tulsa, Oklahoma, Police Department
 Matthew C. Kirkpatrick, Dayton, Ohio, Police Department
 Edwin Kruse, Indianapolis, Indiana, Police Department
 Patrick Lenahan, Cleveland, Ohio, Police Department
 William J. Raney, Memphis, Tennessee, Police Department
 Floyd E. Robertson, Tuscaloosa, Alabama, Police Department
 Murphy J. Roden, Louisiana Bureau of Criminal Ident. and Invest.
 Thomas W. Ryan, Buffalo, New York, Police Department
 Verne Snellen, Kentucky State Police
 J. C. Stone, Orlando, Florida, Police Department
 William Taggart, Greenville, Mississippi, Police Department
 Emile Vallet, Seattle, Washington, Police Department
 Richard H. Wall, Passaic, New Jersey, Police Department
 Thomas Welch, Albany, New York, Police Department
 Eugene M. Wells, Texas Highway Patrol
 Herman W. Zimmerman, Lexington, North Carolina, Police Department

A QUESTIONABLE PATTERN

Continuing the discussions of scarred patterns which appeared in the two preceding issues of this Bulletin, the third and final type is presented at this time.

In this case, the pattern is only partially obliterated by the scar, allowing reasonably accurate classification into the general type, but not permitting subclassification with any definite degree of precision. An illustration of such a pattern is reproduced below.

In this impression, the scar does not obliterate the ridges to such an extent that the loop characteristics cannot be determined readily. For this reason, the pattern would be classified as a radial or ulnar loop, subject to the hand in which it appears. It is in the ridge counting and in the determination of the dependent subclassification that the problem arises. The rule of procedure in cases of this nature is to give the pattern in question the ridge counting, or ridge tracing, of the corresponding finger of the opposite hand, in case both fingers are of the same general type. Where the corresponding finger is of a different general type, the scarred impression is given the most probable subclassification. Thus the present example would be given the ridge count of the corresponding finger of the other hand if that finger should appear as a loop. If the opposite impression is a different type, the pattern under discussion would be given a preference ridge count of twelve. Under either circumstance, reference searches should be conducted into all possible loop combinations.

POLICE PROBLEMS OF TODAY

Remarks of John Edgar Hoover, Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice, before the Convention of the International Association of Chiefs of Police at Kansas City, Missouri, 10 a.m., September 22, 1936.

It is my happy privilege to appear again before the International Association of Chiefs of Police and to discuss frankly our many problems. As I have stated upon previous occasions, we meet upon a basis of mutual professional understanding and interest.

The duties of police administrators today are exceedingly complex. That they have succeeded generally in securing effective law-enforcement is in itself a tribute to their ability, integrity, resourcefulness and courage. The obstacles which impede their progress are legion. The proper selection and training of personnel, uncertain tenure of office, difficulty in obtaining up-to-date equipment and the unremitting resistance of biased political groups, all are barricades which constantly hamper efficiency.

There is not a single law-enforcement agency in the United States which is not menaced in some degree by the efforts of political manipulation. Corrupt political meddling in police work constitutes a tremendous public menace. I often wonder whether political leaders feel that the police are supposed to serve them or to serve society. The average police chief does his best to combat existing conditions. This situation is not peculiar to any police body or any city. Our only recourse is hard work and service, to so "sell" the police to the public that the public itself will demand honest and equal enforcement of the law as applied to each citizen, regardless of race, color, creed or party affiliation. We can and we must convince the public of the dire need for the complete divorcement of police and politics.

May I now mention the all-important subject of police training? Immediately following your last Convention in July, 1935, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, with the active cooperation and assistance of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, initiated the first National Police Training Academy. It was then an experiment embarked upon with bright hopes. It is now an accomplished fact, sound in both theory and practice, and it is an attainment to which your Association may point with the same pride as marked the establishment of the National Identification Division in 1924 and the Uniform Crime Statistics project in 1930.

The third school conducted by the FBI National Police Academy is now nearing its close. There are 34 officers from as many departments attending the sessions. Their enthusiasm and interest in the training accorded them is of itself a tribute to the desire of the police as a whole to receive proper training once they are given the opportunity. Including the officers in attendance at the present class, 82 law-enforcement officials in the United States have now received training by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. I take great pride in the fact that the majority of graduates have, since their return to their home cities, received promotions.

Happily, a large percentage of attendant officers have possessed the broad general background which has enabled them to act in turn as instructors in their own departments, thus bringing to the individual officers detailed information as to the latest and most up-to-date methods of crime detection.

If the Federal Bureau of Investigation has been able to attain results in the law-enforcement field, it has been due to the wise and inspiring leadership of Attorney General Homer S. Cummings and to the magnificent cooperation extended to it by the local law-enforcement units which you represent. It has truly come from a real pooling of assets and free exchange of information. So the FBI National Police Academy was but a natural growth of that close bond of mutual understanding of each other's problems. We of the Federal Bureau of Investigation are glad to impart to the students in attendance every bit of knowledge which we possess; we are gratified to receive from these officers, in turn, information relative to their individual problems, procedures and technique. We have no corner on the brain market in the Federal Bureau of Investigation and these schools have given to Bureau officials the opportunity to learn from the officers in attendance many things of great assistance in the discharge of their every-day duties.

The Bureau has inaugurated a national stolen property file during the past year. Announcements concerning the scope of this activity have been published and further information will be supplied in the future. It is my hope to compile, at Washington, complete information relative to stolen property, which will enable the individual police organizations of the United States to obtain, through this national clearing house of information, data to identify any property stolen or information that such property is recovered, pawned or disposed of otherwise. I confidently hope that this file eventually will serve a purpose similar to that effected by our Identification Division, which now acts as a reservoir of information of the complete criminal histories of all persons arrested and charged with crime.

The last fiscal year witnessed the greatest single increase in the Bureau's identification activities. A total of 1,101,327 fingerprints was received by the Bureau. Of these, 760,986 were criminal records received and retained and you will be particularly interested to note 52.7% of the current prints were identified with previous records. There were over 5,700 fugitives from justice whose impressions were also identified as their prints were searched currently against the fingerprint files. I view this fingerprint collection as one of society's strongest individual bulwarks in its warfare against crime. Without the fingerprint collection, which allows us to distinguish the first offender from the recidivist, society indeed would find it difficult to determine the degree or measure of the depredations committed by each and to punish him in the light of his past activities.

We have effected considerable progress in our crime laboratory during the past year. The laboratory and single fingerprint examiners checked 1,392 individual pieces of evidence, at the request of state, county, and municipal law-enforcement agencies. During this same period, the Bureau's experts prepared numerous photographic enlargements and charts for use by the local departments and also appeared in many trial proceedings. Our experts in these instances appeared without cost to the individual municipalities.

The Bureau feels that in arranging for laboratory assistance to the various departments which are not equipped financially or otherwise to handle scientific examination of evidence, it is repaying, in part, the splendid assistance which the local police bodies have afforded to the Bureau in other matters. Yet, individual private experts have criticized this policy of the Bureau and have expressed the opinion that it "cuts in" upon their practice. May I point out that the Bureau intends to continue this assistance wherever possible. It is my definite opinion that our service in this respect to local officers is a progressive and constructive move, of definite aid to law-enforcement.

I look forward to the day when "expert" testimony in criminal cases in all our courts will be given by witnesses, trained and skilled in their particular specialty, and predicated upon careful analysis of the evidence without regard to passing expediency--political or monetary. There is no place for charlatans in the field of scientific crime detection and unless we stand guard against the infiltration of such tendencies this valuable and necessary adjunct to law-enforcement will be discredited before the bar of public opinion.

As for the problems of apprehension which face us all, there is little need for me to repeat what we all know; that the heaviest burden of crime continues to be the wrongdoings of youth. However, it should be emphasized that a greater interest among law-enforcement agencies in the problems of youth can be made a tremendous force in attempting to wipe out this condition. In recent years, the police departments and youth have been drifting too far apart. And youth has been drifting deeper into crime. It is necessary that law-enforcement agencies make overtures to young people and do everything possible to assure youth that the first desire of an enforcement agency is to aid the young person in his or her every problem instead of adopting a policy which breeds fear and distrust.

I believe the time will come when a part of a law-enforcement officer's requirements will be his ability to obtain the confidence, respect, and friendship of the young person. Friendly guidance is needed, especially in our big cities. Police associations which have as their object the building of interest among children, especially those in the poorer districts, in athletics, clean amusement, proper type of hero worship, and the belief that whenever in trouble they should go to the nearest policeman, are elements which should be vastly extended. The boy or girl who admires and desires to emulate some honest, efficient and friendly law-enforcement officer is well reinforced against the temptations of the underworld.

Just as cooperation is needed between the police and the citizen, so is it a vital factor between law-enforcement organizations. Certainly, the Federal Bureau of Investigation believes most thoroughly in such exchange, and today, may I express to you the Bureau's gratitude for your efficient cooperation. I am daily gratified by evidences of the desire of honest and efficient officers and agencies to aid in every way possible in overcoming our problems. I want to thank publicly the local law-enforcement officers who have so willingly gone upon missions of aid to this Bureau. It is a rule of the Federal Bureau of Investigation that all such instances be brought directly to my personal attention. My interest in them is unflagging.

It certainly enlivens a day perhaps clouded by the inevitable jealousies, bickerings, attempts at pressure and all the other ills to which any law-enforcement head falls heir, to receive a report that a Chief of Police in Colorado, upon a telephone call from the Special Agent in Charge at Denver, hurried forth from his office to an efficient surveillance, followed by the apprehension of a badly wanted Federal fugitive and, not stopping there, put this man in an automobile and delivered him into Federal custody after an arduous drive of fifty-two miles over mountainous roads.

Again, it is a joy to know that in the effort to gather evidence regarding a kidnaping case two Wyoming officers, giving all of their time, as hundreds of other officers were doing throughout the entire West in an attempt to block the roads against flight, proceeded upon a heroic journey along a road so dangerous because of fog that it was necessary for one of them to ride on the running board signaling directions to the other officer at the wheel. Time after time in this journey, cars seemed to leap out of the gray mist and bear down upon them. It was only through sheer luck and courage that the trip was made. I know and understand just what this journey meant: the waiting families of these two men at home, the long hours without sleep, the nervous fatigue of constant watchfulness and the fact that they did this, not for personal glory, but for the upholding of all the traditions of good law-enforcement, in that they gave freely of their time, their energy and their bravery to aid a fellow law-enforcement agency -- the Federal Bureau of Investigation -- is tribute indeed to the type of officers who some day will prevail throughout every organization.

I could go on and on with these examples. There were Texas officers, who took up an extortion case when it was necessary for Special Agents to be drawn away and who carried through to a successful conclusion the conducting of the surveillance, the capture, and the obtaining of the confession. Again, there was the recognition of a dangerous escaped Federal convict, apprehended and held by a North Dakota officer, and the recognition and arrest of a Federal fugitive done swiftly, surely, and efficiently by a North Carolina officer. I am reminded of the recognition of a photograph in a newspaper by a California officer leading to the arrest of a man who had been a Federal fugitive for three years and the quick work of Georgia officers in the location and apprehension of criminals, Federal fugitives, who apparently were no more than wandering vagrants. There are hundreds of other instances of this type which thrill me with the knowledge that, while there do exist in the United States certain cities and localities in which the influence of the underworld has eaten to the core of law-enforcement or where jealousies, desire for publicity and personal ambitions have superseded the more important job of protecting the public welfare, there yet remains a tremendous majority of honest, cooperative, manly, and self-sacrificing officers to whom I, here and now, pay my respects and offer my congratulations and deepest gratitude.

It recently became necessary to obtain some fragmentary statistics regarding the necessity for the use of firearms in the capture of certain desperate types of criminals. It was amazing to learn that for every nine criminals who died in battle with law-enforcement agencies, an officer also gave his life. This was especially disheartening, in that recent developments in the manufacture of firearms have heightened the danger to the law-enforcement officer, threatening to make useless millions upon millions of dollars in police equipment. There are being offered for sale weapons which will tear their way through hitherto allegedly bulletproof vests as though they were mere paper, and so far beyond the reach of the average police appropriation that they offer to criminals, with their greater ability to pay, not only a new temptation to begin a wave of police killings but a measure of safety against apprehension not equalled in police history.

I refer to the new type of revolvers and ammunition recently put upon the market. They are said to be made for sporting purposes, but inevitably some of them will fall into the hands of criminals. I submit that the only game that will fall before their deadly fire will be the law-enforcement officer. It is too great a waste of life when 10% of the fatalities occurring in the battle between lawless elements and the law-enforcement officers represent the death in line of duty of fearless officers.

On an average of once a week somewhere in the United States, a law-enforcement officer is killed at the hands of the underworld. It is unfortunate that we do not possess accurate statistics upon this subject and that we have not at this time the facilities by which we can create a national roll of honor for these casualties of law-enforcement, so that the public might know the names, the careers, and the citations which belong to these heroes of today's war on crime and thus pay them the appropriate homage which they so justly deserve. I hope that if the time ever comes when this national memorial becomes a reality the Federal Bureau of Investigation may be allowed to place the names of its hallowed and heroic dead to mingle with those of the hallowed and heroic dead of the police departments of America who, while operating under other names, have lived true to the motto under which the Federal Bureau of Investigation operates -- Fidelity, Bravery, Integrity.

The public should know more about our dead and how they died. The members of the International Association of Chiefs of Police should engage more actively in gathering facts concerning their men who have died in battle. After all, an organization lives by its traditions and we should have the same long line of heroic heritage which gives to the Army and the Navy and the Marine Corps the will to carry on; to thrill youth with its record; to give pride to its friends, and fear to its foes!

It is amazing to notice the reaction of some persons or groups of persons when a criminal is plundering his way throughout the land shooting and killing as he goes. There is stark fear and pleas to law-enforcement officers to eradicate the criminal. Terror is everywhere apparent. But when this person, perhaps with a record of multiple murder, prison escape, robbery and kidnaping, finally is cornered, and killed because of his desperate gun-in-hand resistance, how strangely these persons of mercurial sentimentalities can change! How concerned they become over the death of this dear, beloved young man, who died only because his trigger finger was not quite as quick as that of some well-trained law officer.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has not been spared by this type of publicity monger, jealous bureaucrat, and disappointed patronage-seeker. The problem is one which exists everywhere and so, in answer to those who have been so concerned about the killing of such persons as "Baby Face" Nelson and "Pretty Boy" Floyd and Fred Barker and Eddie Green and John Dillinger, allow me to say that should the same conditions arise tomorrow with the same sort of men, the actions of the Federal Bureau of Investigation would be exactly as they were at the time those men were killed. No apologies are made, no excuses are offered. The record stands where anyone can look at it and where anyone with true justice in his heart will approve it.

In the last three years, during the most terrible period of criminal history in the life of America, it has been necessary for the law-enforcement agencies of the United States to shoot approximately 1,200 desperate law violators who resisted arrest, of whom the Federal Bureau of Investigation killed nine. Of those nine persons, practically all were being sought for kidnaping or murder. All but one had a record of previous incarceration. At least four of them had at some time in their long, vicious, determined careers of criminality, taken the lives of one or more police officers. All of them resisted arrest and sought to take the lives of Special Agents. There is a notion in certain peculiarly solicitous circles that a professional killer should be given "a fair chance" to kill an arresting officer. Jailing machine gun bandits is not a sporting affair. It is a grim business in which the forces of law should reduce their chances of being shot to a minimum.

During the past three years, when the forces of law-enforcement were being challenged on all sides by the criminal hordes, the Federal Bureau of Investigation met this challenge by the apprehension and conviction of over 11,000 dangerous men and women without the necessity for using firearms. Of these persons, 330 were kidnapers and extortioners. Many of them were persons who had escaped from jail and prison upon numerous occasions. There were bank robbers of the most vicious order and enemies of society of the type of John Paul Chase, who murdered a Special Agent; Harvey Bailey, with his mad dog record; Albert Bates; "Machine Gun" Kelly; Harry Campbell; Arthur Barker; William Mahan and Harmon Waley, the kidnapers of young George Weyerhaeuser, Jr., of Tacoma, and hundreds of others of their type, including the man who had made threat after threat that he would not be taken alive; that he would die with a machine gun in his hand; that his greatest joy would be that of seeing groveling forms of bullet-riddled Special Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation -- I refer to that rat among humans, Alvin Karpis. This is the record of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and we stand upon it! Anyone, from sentimentalists to patronage-seekers, who sees in this record anything but honest, efficient endeavor to give the people of America the protection which they deserve, either is too ignorant or too sentimental to discuss the subject of law-enforcement, or he possesses some ulterior purpose.

However, it seems impossible to avoid the ministrations of the so-called "Crime expert." I recently received from one of these supersentimentalists a magic formula which I am sure will appeal to you practical men of law-enforcement. It stated that: "Love is the highest redemptive quality of all in the reformation of the criminal and the prisoner should be permitted all the love possible from the outside world. The trouble with the persons who undertake to help the criminal is that when their trust is betrayed for the first few times, sympathy turns to disgust or anger." I might add that the person who wrote that letter is an attorney at law, who, when admitted to the bar, took an oath to uphold the traditions of justice and serve the purposes of law and order.

Such persons as this go about the country like a pack of mongrels, yapping ill-advised, badly conceived ideas, and often are animated by personal motives as they carry their packsacks of nostrums by which they attempt, in patent medicine style, to cure the moral ills of nature. May I ask you practical gentlemen of law-enforcement to do all in your power, through the proper publicity in your communities, to assure yourselves that the problem of law-enforcement remains in the hands of those who know their business and not be given into the control of crackbrains, who believe that love is the greatest redemptive quality of all in the reformation of criminals.

It may be that crime is a disease, that there is some quirk in a man's make-up which makes a criminal of him. But until it is definitely established that criminals are merely sick persons and methods of treatment are devised to cure their illness, society, in self-defense, must stick to its policy of punishment. If these jaundiced minds must sympathize with somebody, let them think first of the victims of criminals.

Perhaps since love rules the world and forms the highest redemptive quality of all in the reformation of the criminal, we may at last have found an explanation of why so many of the desperate persons whom the law-enforcement agencies of America are called upon to re-arrest, have been the objects of one or more forms of clemency. I see, from referring to this magic formula, that the trouble with persons who undertake to help the criminal is that when their trust is betrayed for the first few times, sympathy turns to disgust or anger. Rather, it turns to dismay because, although this statement was made by a single person, its nonsense remains fundamentally and basically the principle upon which too many other persons and organizations have adhered in their reckless and wild freeing of dangerous criminals.

The parole problem remains a problem, perhaps more complicated than ever because of the desperate efforts of interested persons to conceal the true severity of the situation and, by their twisting of apparent facts, to seek to muddle the public mind concerning it. Again, it becomes necessary to examine the record, especially my record as concerns public utterances upon the subject of parole. Misguided proponents have attempted to instill into the minds of the public the belief that my sole desire is to put men in prison and keep them there without giving them a chance to reform. That is absolutely and thoroughly untrue!

I have said time after time in public utterances that I believe in the principle of parole; that I believe it is right and proper that a first offender of the proper timber, of the proper qualifications be allowed a chance to go back into the world and rehabilitate himself. But, I have insisted that this man be worthy of the trust that is imposed upon him; that, in going forth, he make a bargain with the public which gives reasonable promise that in return for his freedom he will make every possible effort to reform. When he betrays this confidence, when he fails in his promises, he indicates that inherently he possesses the criminal instincts which will make of him a recidivist and which, if he is again forgiven, will place another desperate character upon the list of those who once a week send some law-enforcement officer to his death.

I am not only a friend of the parole system, but I am a far better friend than those persons who believe that love is the primary redemptive quality of reforming a criminal. I am a friend of the man who wants to regain his place in the world; of the unfortunate who has stubbed his toe against our laws; of the young fellow who has made his mistake in life and is determined that never again shall he commit this error. I am a friend of the person made desperate through force of circumstances, who has yielded to temptation, who learns his lesson and will not forget it.

Because I am the friend of these unfortunates, because I want to see them go back to their wives and families and fight out their battle to a successful culmination, I am absolutely and unalterably opposed to the intervention of sentimental sob-sisters, who go about the country opening the doors of prisons to such men as Alvin Karpis, Harvey Bailey, "Baby Face" Nelson, John Dillinger and all the rest of their recidivist, habitually and professionally criminal clan of plunderers and murderers whose freedom can only place a stain upon the theory and practice of parole.

Because I am a friend of parole, I am opposed to weak or inefficient or monetarily-controlled parole boards. It is because of this that I constantly insist that something must be done to increase the efficiency of parole supervision throughout the states of America. It is beyond my comprehension that with the marvelous example of efficient parole adjudication, administration, and supervision such as exists in the Federal Parole System, there should be such horrible mishandling of parole by various states. That is why I am fighting. I shall continue to do so. I stand upon my record. We cannot have honest, thorough, and impartial justice nor law-enforcement in America so long as we have unfairness in parole. That is what it amounts to -- unfairness, injustice, incapability, inefficiency. I ask that all of you gentlemen, whom I count as my friends in the great job of fighting crime, give of your time, your thoughts, and your efforts that this horrible tangle of misapplied clemency be stricken from the list of our problems.

In spite of many of these obstacles which daily face us - venal politicians seeking to shackle the hands of law-enforcement by sniping tactics reflected in reduced appropriations or restricted activities; moo-cow criminologists with impractical theories of crime prevention, who have gained their knowledge from pamphlets and professional prognostications without ever once having seen a criminal with a gun in his hand or viewed the sprawled victim of a murderer; slobbering sob-sisters, criminal-coddlers and gushing well-wishers of the convict turning loose on a long-suffering public and sorely tried and harassed police officers; hordes of recidivists who flout and sneer at the temple of Justice; shyster lawyers who too quickly forget their oath as officers of the courts of justice, to become blatant mouth-pieces for the forces of lawlessness and crime -- I say that, in spite of these almost insurmountable obstacles, the law-enforcement officers of America have kept faith and have made real progress. This is reflected in the fact that national police statistics covering the past three years show a substantial decrease in the number of major crimes committed.

We keepers of the civil peace have no small task. The general trains a lifetime that he may make one right decision on the field of battle. The admiral of the fleet has every device and counsel within the power of his country when he meets the enemy. Where are these years of training, these devices and these counsels in the pattern of law enforcement? There are more criminals in the United States today than there were Americans enlisted in the World War, and yet the board of strategy on the criminal front has its full measure of traitors and political renegades who hold the power of official extinction over the heads of the very officers who seek to combat crime..

Good citizens and taxpayers, for whom you risk your lives for small pittance every day, cannot believe, even when they see, that the cost of crime is one of the most crushing burdens of man in these times. For the national defense against foreign enemies they make liberal and necessary provision, and demand men of the highest intelligence and integrity to protect the national honor. And yet they subject the average police officer, without training or equipment, to a life of hazard and uncertainty on a front where peace never reigns, where there is no armistice, and where the flag of truce is but a mask of ambush.

And yet we have a comfort not known to other men. There is no satisfaction to compare with knowing that you have done a hard job well. This is a greater peace than that secured by treaty. It is the peace among men who have no fear. May you enjoy until we meet again that peace and satisfaction.

FBI Technical Laboratory

During the month of September 1936, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, through its Technical Laboratory, was able to render assistance to state and municipal law enforcement agencies in fifty instances.

THE REPRODUCTION OF ORIGINAL EVIDENCE IN THE THIRD DIMENSION

A logical query to the phrase "Reproduction of Original Evidence" might well be - why seek to obtain a reproduction which is actually of less value from an evidentiary standpoint than that which is already existent. The answer is perhaps best illustrated by a hypothetical fact situation - one which the law enforcement officer must be prepared to cope with: An officer on arriving at the scene of a crime finds a body from which all immediate traces of identification have been removed, even to the severing of the hands to prevent identification through the medium of fingerprints. He also finds nearby, footprints impressed in the earth which because of their varying size, shape, and location, show evidence of the presence of two persons who had been engaged in a struggle. Several of these prints are clearly outlined. In addition, an automobile tire track is found imprinted in the ground nearby; no other information of value is available after a minute examination has been made. The foot and tire imprints are definite clues, yet by their very nature they are fragile things which rainfall might erase or careless persons obliterate, before a suspect's shoes or an automobile tire are available for comparison. The facial features of the victim, of course, constitute a means of identification, but sometimes only after countless individuals have viewed them. Obviously, something looking toward the preservation of this evidence must be accomplished forthwith. The answer is to translate this invaluable information into three-dimensional replicas through the medium of either plaster of Paris or the process popularly known as "moulage."

The word "moulage" has its origin in the French word "mouler" meaning to cast or to mold. The value of moulage in the field of identification work, its superiority in certain instances to photography, and its illustrative value in the court room, have been discussed in a previous issue of this bulletin. (1) Hence, it will be the purpose of this article to consider the more practical problem of how to reproduce the original evidence, by this process, once it has been located.

PLASTIC SURGERY

A study of the science of moulage, originally drafted from the fields of art and medicine to meet the special needs of crime detection and identification work, shows a gradual improvement over a period of years of the materials used to effect the desired reproduction. Before entering a discussion of the substances used, it might perhaps be well to review the steps necessary to secure a reproduction of a specified object. The first objective is that of obtaining a mold which is a negative copy of the object; the second is that making a positive cast or actual reproduction of the object in question using the mold as the medium for obtaining it. In other words, the positive material is poured into the negative mold to secure the finished reproduction which is termed the cast.

(1) See article entitled "Moulage," FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin, September 1, 1935.

Dr. Hans Gross in his work entitled "Criminal Investigation" (2) in describing some of the earlier methods employed, mentions the use of stearine for footprints found in sand, dust, or flour; joiners glue for footprints in snow; wax, or in case of necessity cement, fat or suet, clay, paste or breadcrumbs for other footprints. He reached the conclusion, however, that these materials were of interest from a historical standpoint only, and that the most satisfactory material was generally plaster of Paris, although a mixture of resin and paraffin wax when properly used also gave excellent results.

Among other substances mentioned as having been used by investigators are pure rubber, not unlike that used by dentists, and thin sheets of aluminum or tin foil. The latter material, useful for tool marks et cetera, is used by placing the foil over the impression and then with light uniform blows hammering the material into the identifying cracks and crevices. Although more successfully employed in recovering the principal tool markings on metal or wood, it frequently fails to record the minute scratches which are generally of utmost importance. (3)

A substance gaining the favor of the British police is reported to be a mixture of resin with wax or paraffin. A suggested formula is two parts resin and one part wax or paraffin, satisfactory results also being obtained with a mixture of one part resin and two parts wax. Although excellent results were reported to have been obtained with this material, the observation was made that it was first necessary to heat the material over a slow fire before using it. (4)

Glue and gelatin also have been used for molding purposes with fair success. (5) These materials if properly dried can be used repeatedly. Due to their elastic properties it is possible to cast in one piece, objects with numerous undercuts (6) which would ordinarily require two or even three piece molds. The negative mold on being pulled and literally stretched away from the undercuts, will spring back into its original shape.

- (6) Ibid. The author explains undercuts as follows:
 "An undercut is the part of the original subject or mold that is to be cast which prevents the impression from slipping freely away or separating."

Experiments conducted in the Technical Laboratory of the FBI with these materials reveal that considerable heat is required to bring them to the liquid state and they are, therefore, not suitable for making reproductions of animal tissue. However, either may be used on inanimate objects.

One substance which has been used successfully for many years, particularly on foot and tire impressions, is plaster of Paris. Only the finest grade of art plaster should be used. The only other materials needed when using this substance are water and a container in which to mix the plaster. Little skill or previous experience is necessary to properly work the plaster. After estimating the amount of water required to fill the impression, the water is placed in the receptacle to be used and the plaster of Paris added slowly. The mixture should be constantly stirred until it has attained the consistency of rich cream or pancake batter. It should not be allowed to set for more than a minute or two before pouring onto the imprint, as the plaster hardens fairly rapidly.

One other suggested method for preparing plaster of Paris is as follows: "A rubber cup is filled with one pint of water (approximately enough for one footprint) and the plaster of Paris is spread over the water. No stirring is permitted. The plaster of Paris is allowed to sink to the bottom spontaneously. Enough should be added until the water is unable to absorb any more. The mixture is then ready for use. Before using, it should be stirred thoroughly ---." (7)

One of the main difficulties encountered in the use of plaster of Paris is that this material, on hardening, will adhere to most surfaces that it comes in contact with, including a subsequently added layer of plaster; further, it is non-elastic, and entirely rigid. Therefore, one of the first problems to consider in both molding and casting with this material is that of adequately treating the object being reproduced to prevent this adherence. This problem has been successfully coped with by placing a lubricating substance on the evidence prior to application of the plaster. The procedure to be followed in properly preparing the evidence is discussed in greater detail in subsequent descriptions of actual problems. The fact that the material is rigid necessitates two or three piece molds when casting objects that have irregular or curved surfaces with undercuts, a hand for instance which is cast as far as the wrist, or a spherical object. Nevertheless, experiments conducted in the Bureau's Technical Laboratory have shown that a very accurate and faithful reproduction is obtained through the proper use of plaster of Paris.

Considering for a moment the materials mentioned so far, it will be recalled that, of those materials which are most practical, glue, although unsatisfactory for making molds of animate objects because of the high temperature required, does have the feature of elasticity. Plaster of Paris, on the other hand, is easy to prepare, may be readily obtained, and need not be heated, but is not entirely satisfactory because of its adhering tendencies and its non-elasticity. A preparation having the advantages of both of these materials would overcome many of the difficulties heretofore encountered, and it was probably just such a problem that inspired the late Dr. Alphonse Poller, a Viennese, and founder of the Poller moulage method, (8) to develop a molding material, utilizing agar as a base. Mixed with the agar are such materials as magnesium soaps, absorbent cellulose fibers, and water. (9) The exact formula of this product, which is patented (10) and marketed under a trade name, is not published.

For several years after its first appearance on the market this material was difficult to obtain in this country. There are now, however, numerous concerns in the United States producing a similar substance which may be purchased at a comparatively reasonable price. Thus the investigator now has at his disposal a molding material which reaches a liquid state at about 180 to 200 degrees (Fahrenheit) and does not commence to congeal until it has cooled to about 108 to 110 degrees (Fahrenheit), which is but slightly above body temperature. When applied to the human body it requires about one-half hour for a mold of average thickness (one inch) to set. The setting time may be retarded by thinning the mixture with water, or it may be accelerated by the application of cold towels, or the utilization of other cooling methods. There is a sufficient amount of resiliency to permit removal of such a mold from objects having an average amount of undercutting. The investigator need have no fear that the material will adhere to the evidence unless it is of a very porous nature, in which case it would, of course, be necessary to grease the material to be reproduced. The introduction of hot positive compositions will not mar the mold unless the temperature of the substance is at or above the melting point of the negative moulage. Plaster of Paris may be used for casting without danger of adherence when placed in a negative moulage mold. The negative material may be used repeatedly for a long period of time before it loses its strength and elasticity, assuming it has been properly heated and stored. As soon as the cast is taken out, any foreign matter should be removed from the mold. It may then be cut into small pieces, ground in an ordinary meat grinder and stored away in a moisture-proof container.

One complaint that might be raised is that the negative moulage must be heated for the purpose of changing it from a solid to a liquid state before it can be used. Consequently, it is sometimes difficult to use this material away from the laboratory; i.e., at the scene of a crime committed in an uninhabited or sparsely settled area where heating and cooking facilities may not be obtainable. This objection may be partly overcome by transporting the heated material to the scene of operation in a thermos jug which will keep it in a liquid state for several hours.

In heating the negative moulage material it is preferably placed in a double-boiler, but may be placed directly over the stove. If the latter, it must be gently stirred to prevent burning. In either instance all lumps should be smoothed out during the heating process; about two hours is generally required to properly heat the material. Having reached a liquidified state it should be allowed to cool gradually, and as the outer material cools first, it should be stirred occasionally to prevent the formation of a crust. When first used the negative moulage has the proper consistency but thereafter a lot of moisture is lost through usage. This may be remedied by the addition of small amounts of water. Approximately one-half gill to each pound of the material is usually sufficient.

In addition to the negative molding material mentioned, Dr. Alphonse Poller also developed a wax-like positive substance with a high resin content. The advantages of this positive material, which has been simulated by others and is available in this country, are numerous. For instance, it is possible to brush this material into the cracks and crevices of the mold, thereby eliminating the possibility of air bubbles and the danger of overlapping, a condition caused by the junction of hot and cold wax on a smooth surface. Another feature that might be mentioned is that the wax has a sufficiently high melting point to withstand summer heat. Further mention will be made concerning the application of the positive material to the mold in subsequent discussions of actual problems.

This article will be continued in the December issue of the FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin. The subject matter of reproducing Footprints, Tire Tracks, Tool-marks, Perishables and Post Mortem Reconstruction will be discussed, with accompanying illustrations, in the succeeding portions of the article.

STATISTICS CONCERNING WOMEN IN CRIME

During the first six months of 1936, 16,092 women were arrested and fingerprinted throughout the United States. This information was disclosed by fingerprint cards received in the Identification Division of the FBI, from local law enforcement agencies. Slightly more than 7 out of every 100 persons arrested and fingerprinted were females. This figure has remained at approximately 7 per cent during the past three years.

Women were charged with all types of crime during this period and a comparison of the charges placed against an average of 100 females and an average group of males arrested and fingerprinted, disclosed that there was a more pronounced tendency of members of the female sex to commit crimes of violence against the person than in the case of the males.

THE "FENCE" AND ORGANIZED CRIME

One of the most serious problems confronting law enforcement today is the criminal receiver of and dealer in stolen, embezzled and fraudulently obtained property, commonly referred to as the "fence." Directly or indirectly all business and all individuals suffer from this type of criminal.

Law enforcement agencies have made noteworthy progress in combatting crime but, if continued progress is to be made, every effort must be exerted to the eradication of organized crime in all fields. Major thefts, hijackings and regular merchandise losses are costing the citizenry vast sums of money each year. The problem is quite serious and calls upon the law enforcement agencies to give it the same thought and action which has enabled them to successfully cope with other crimes to the extent of making them unprofitable.

The continued existence of modern major theft organizations is made possible only by the receiver of stolen goods -- the "fence." He is the contact man between thief and consumer, the middle man without whose assistance the thief could find no market for his stolen goods.

Organized rings of thieves could not survive without the aid of the "fence" and except possibly for the thief who steals for self use or consumption, it is doubtful whether unconnected thieves would find their thefts profitable and disposable. An integral part of organized crime, the "fence," in plying his unlawful pursuit needs a trained personnel, often being the same as is necessary to carry on a legitimate business. "Fences" specialize in certain easily disposable commodities and while engaged in handling stolen goods operate legitimate business establishments such as drug stores, grocery stores, warehouses, and other apparent lawful pursuits which to the untrained investigator cover their illegal traffic in stolen merchandise.

The detection and conviction of the "fence" is made more difficult by the fact that he is often found to be an individual of considerable importance in his community, his contact with the criminal element being well guarded and with precautions taken to avoid implication, should a thief make any attempt to connect him with any crime. To detect the activities of the big "fences" and to procure the necessary evidence to convict them is a challenge to the ability of our law enforcement agencies. The success in other seemingly impossible tasks can be duplicated in this field as well. If the "fence" can be removed from the set-up of organized crime a tremendous stride in the eradication of crime will have been accomplished.

Peace officers today are not only interested in detection and apprehension but in crime prevention as well. Here again the elimination of the "fence" would render assistance. Many cases are known where the "fence" has rendered financial aid to the thief tiding him over a period of inactivity, knowing that he will be repaid many fold after the next theft; too, the financing of proposed robberies is not uncommon. Due to the "fence's" associations with legitimate business he is frequently able to secure information as to the location, movements and methods of handling certain goods. This information is then passed on to the thief. Another practice which perhaps does more to induce newcomers into crime than other influences is that of letting it be known that certain commodities will be purchased by the "fence" with no question asked as to the means of procurement or of offering a thief a means of transportation after giving information as to where merchandise can be stolen.

Special Agents of the Seaboard Air Line Railway, Savannah, Georgia in May of 1936 furnished the Atlanta, Georgia Office of the FBI with information to the effect that they had arrested a negro named Tellis Statham and that Statham had confessed to participation in a series of thefts from interstate shipments, implicating several other negroes and a white man, one Barney Hohenstein.

In cooperation, officers of the Seaboard Air Line Railway and Special Agents of the FBI instituted a thorough investigation into the activities of the white man, Hohenstein, and his negro associates. It was learned that the thefts consummated by the group extended over the period from September 22, 1935, to December 30, 1935, the actual thefts taking place at Vidalia, Abbeville, Dublin, and Savannah, Georgia.

Tellis Statham related to FBI Special Agents and railroad officers that he had come to Savannah, Georgia, from Birmingham, Alabama, in September of 1935. He had several meals at the Palace Cafe, operated by Barney Hohenstein, who catered to negro trade. Statham became acquainted with Hohenstein, who asked him if he would be able to obtain any cigarettes, it being understood that the cigarettes would be stolen cigarettes obtained by breaking into railroad cars and warehouses. Statham expressed his willingness to attempt to provide cigarettes for Hohenstein, with the understanding that Hohenstein would pay him $25.00 per case and would furnish an automobile for the purpose of bringing the cigarettes to Hohenstein's place.

Statham related further that he informed Noble James Davidson, Jr., a negro employed to handle freight for the Seaboard Air Line Railway at Savannah, of Hohenstein's proposition and later effected an arrangement with Davidson whereby Davidson would secure information as to the location of railroad cars containing cigarette shipments. Davidson furnished this information to Statham and other members of the gang later organized. William Knox and Isaac Brown, negroes, were subsequently informed of the arrangement with Hohenstein and the gang thereupon formulated plans to effect the robbery of various railroad cars containing cigarette shipments, the information as to the location of the shipments being obtained and furnished in each instance by Davidson, who was to receive $1.00 for each case of cigarettes stolen. Five known thefts were uncovered which were attributable to the gang and which involved twenty-five cases of cigarettes, two cases of chewing gum and several cases of cigars amounting in value to approximately $1500.00. On all but one occasion Hohenstein drove the car at the time the thefts were made.

On June 2, 1936, a true bill of indictment was returned by the Federal Grand Jury at Savannah, Georgia, charging Hohenstein, Statham, Davidson, Brown, and Knox with violation of the Statute pertaining to thefts from interstate shipments. On June 8, 1936, the four negroes entered pleas of guilty and their sentences were deferred until the completion of the trial of Hohenstein, who was tried in the United States District Court in Savannah on June 8 and June 9, 1936. Hohenstein was found guilty by a jury and on June 9, 1936, was sentenced to serve five years in a United States Penitentiary. On the same date, Statham, Knox and Brown were sentenced to serve three years each and Noble James Davidson, Jr., was sentenced to serve one year and one day in a United States Penitentiary to be designated by the Attorney General.

The case above is typical of many which cause law enforcement agencies endless trouble. Such series of thefts can usually be traced to the instigating influence of a "fence." Hijackings, where the thieves pass truckload after truckload of merchandise and then choose one, leave no other conclusion than that the thieves had been advised as to what trucks to pick and that they would have a market for the particular goods in that truck.

In the following case investigation disclosed that a series of tire truck hijackings were being perpetrated to provide tires for several stores which were operated by the "fences" to dispose of goods obtained through their associated hijacking crews.

On October 19, 1932, the Liberty Highway Company of Toledo, Ohio, a trucking concern, advised the FBI Detroit Office that one of its trucks, carrying a cargo of automobile tires valued at approximately $10,000 from Akron, Ohio, to Chicago, Illinois, and Wyandotte, Michigan, was hijacked on Route 18, between Akron and Medina, Ohio, at about 10 o'clock on the night of October 17, 1932, by four unidentified men. The truck was hijacked while it was ascending a hill at low speed, two of the hijackers appearing on each side of the truck with guns, forcing the drivers of the truck out and leaving them in the highway while the hijackers disappeared with the truck and cargo, going in the direction of Medina, Ohio.

Although there was no indication as to the identity of these individuals, investigation was initiated by Special Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in an effort to locate these hijackers. In the course of this investigation it was determined that the Wolfson brothers, of Cleveland, Ohio, were suspected by the police of that city of being "fences" for "Hot tires." There was no information determined, however, in the early investigation to the effect that any of the tires stolen in the hijacking of October 17th had been sold through the Wolfson brothers.

On January 3, 1933, a similar hijacking occurred near Medina, Ohio, involving the theft of over 800 automobile tires en route from the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company at Akron, Ohio, to the service stores of that Company at Evansville, Indiana. The mode of operation in this instance was identical with that of the hijacking of October 17, 1932.

On January 25, 1933, a third hijacking occurred near Litchfield, Ohio, the cargo consisting chiefly of auto tires en route from Akron, Ohio, to St. Louis, Missouri.

As a result of investigation pursued by Special Agents of the FBI it was determined that automobile tires which had comprised the cargoes of the last two hijackings had been stored in a barn on the farm of one Frank Koller, located on Roxide Road, in Cuyahoga County, near Independence, Ohio. One Emil Nemick was found to reside directly across the road from Koller. It was determined by the Special Agents of the Bureau conducting the investigation, through the cooperation of the Parma, Ohio, Police Department and from information furnished by Herbert Borling upon his arrest at Parma, Ohio, that Borling, Joe Gill alias Russell Gill, Paul Baker, later identified as Paul Widener, Tony Tabasso and Philip Vitale were the individuals who actually perpetrated the hijacking, holding up the trucks and stealing the cargoes. Through the efforts of Emil Nemick arrangements were made with Koller whereby the stolen tires were stored in Koller's barn, it being represented to him that the concern to which the tires belonged was going into bankruptcy and that it would be necessary to conceal the tires until after the bankruptcy proceedings had taken place.

Through the cooperation of the Cleveland, Ohio, Police Department it was disclosed that a large number of these tires were also concealed in a building located at 8311 Superior Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, where Arthur Louis Alperin operated a tire store. Several of the stolen tires were also taken to a store operated by Philip Wolfson. The activities of Joe Gill and Nick Campanaro, who engineered the hijackings and the transportation of the tires to the "fences," Alperin and Wolfson, were also disclosed in their connections with the hijacking ring. Information was also forthcoming to the effect that Nick Campanaro had been trying to sell goods which were identified as being stolen in the hijacking of October 17, 1932.

As a result of the investigative efforts involving hijacking of trucks engaged in the carrying of freight in interstate commerce, sentences were imposed aggregating $37\frac{1}{2}$ years, to be served in Federal penal institutions.

The magnitude of this problem has been fully realized for some time and was discussed at the National Conference on the reduction of crime which was called by the National Crime Commission in November of 1927. That commission pointed out that the "fence" system is a serious menace in view of the following evils:

1. "It is an inducing cause of crime. One 'fence' can procure any number of thieves and crooks to steal or cheat for him.
2. "It is an outlet from criminal activities of others. Without the 'fence' dishonesty and crookedness would often be abortive. As has often been stated, if the thief or crooked bankrupt had no means of disposing of his loot, he would soon turn to other means of livelihood.

3. "It involves all classes of people. Men of influence and often men of high social business standing are attracted to this type of depredation because of the difficulty that hampers constituted authority in reaching them, and because of the comparative safety with which they operated.
4. "Because of the lesser penalties involved, it attracts criminals of the more violent type who see that the hazards are less and that the profits are larger in this system of crime.
5. "It is often allied to crimes which involve not only burglary, larceny, and fraud generally but also to other crimes which apparently are totally dissociated with it. A striking example of this is the crime of arson. Many fires result from attempts to alibi and explain the disappearance of merchandise which had found its way into the hands of 'fences.'"

It was concluded further by the committee reporting to the National Crime Conference that "In fact every business in which the credit system is established is subject to the depredations of the 'fence' because the crooked business man, through any of the following three ways, can procure merchandise and dispose of it through the 'fence':

1. 'He can buy reputation, in which case, through a dummy, he merely procures a business with an established reputation on the strength of which he may get credit.
2. 'He may adopt reputation, in which event, through a dummy again, he may establish a business which has a trade name sufficiently like a reputable name to deceive prospective creditors into granting credit.
3. 'He may use his own already well established reputation, in which event he uses a dummy as his outlet.'

"These means are not at all isolated, but are everyday occurrences in the realm of crooked failures."

We know that the "fence" is in business because it is highly profitable and when the profit is taken out of the receiving and disposing of stolen or fraudulently obtained property, we will have accomplished a great deal. It is, therefore, urged that serious consideration be given the problem of eradicating the "fence." Eliminate the "fence" from organized crime and we have accomplished something definitely constructive in crime reduction.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

It will be recalled that recently the Federal Bureau of Investigation announced a change of its policy concerning the submission of applicant prints by law enforcement officials for search against the identification records to determine whether a criminal record exists. At that time it was stated that these applicant fingerprints may be submitted on the personal identification forms. It is desired to point out specifically that when applicant fingerprints are forwarded they must bear the word "Applicant" in prominent letters thereon, preferably in the nature of a rubber stamped or distinctive impression, in order that the Bureau upon the receipt of these cards may be able to give them the requisite attention and see that they are searched against the criminal files. These prints then will be filed in the criminal records unless the law enforcement agency forwarding them makes specific request for their return.

The foregoing arrangement, as indicated, will enable the Bureau to identify these applicant prints readily and to afford more effective service to the law enforcement agencies transmitting such records for search against the criminal files. Unless the word "Applicant" appears on a fingerprint card prepared on the personal identification form, it will be routed to the Civil Identification Section without check against the criminal files, in accordance with the existing procedure.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

MURDERER MAY BE IDENTIFIED BY STOLEN WATCH

On August 19, 1936, Edwin Poston was killed by a robber in Stockton, California. The identity of the robber-murderer is as yet unknown. However, a potentially important clue exists in the fact that the murderer stole a watch from the female companion of the victim. The stolen watch is described as follows:

17 jewel wrist watch, Elgin, Baguette, white gold filled, Movement No. 35032853, Case No. 394493, with a white gold link band.

Since this watch may be found outside of Stockton, it is requested that all peace officers be on the alert so as to detect the possible presence of this watch. It is suggested that all Departments maintaining stolen property files prepare an index card to be inserted in the local file to assist in the possible identification of the watch. It is requested that any information concerning this watch be immediately forwarded to the Chief of Police, Stockton, California, and to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Washington, D. C.

Local police agencies are encouraged to transmit for inclusion in the National Stolen Property File maintained by the Federal Bureau of Investigation information concerning stolen property which may be readily identified through serial numbers. The systematic recording of such data in a national clearing house, combined with requests for searches against that file under appropriate circumstances will doubtless result in the recovery of much stolen property and in the building up of the necessary evidence against criminals.

IDENTITY AND RELATIVES OF UNKNOWN DECEASED MAN ESTABLISHED FROM FINGERPRINTS

The valuable service the Bureau frequently is able to render to local law enforcement agencies throughout the United States in identifying unknown deceased persons is again ably illustrated in the following case, making possible the location of relatives of and saving the deceased person from burial in a potter's field.

The fingerprints of an unknown deceased man were forwarded to the Bureau by the Police Department, Columbus, Georgia, together with a letter explaining that the prints were not taken until several days after the death of the deceased man because the body had not been reported to the Police. Nothing was known concerning the deceased individual. Although the prints of this unknown individual were not taken until some time after his death, when the prints were searched through the fingerprint files of the Identification Division of the Bureau they were found to be identical with the fingerprints of one Lonnie Beckley, alias Frank Reid, alias Frank Reed. The fingerprint records disclosed that this individual began to serve a sentence of two years for burglary in March 1925, at the State Penitentiary, Huntsville, Texas, and again in December 1926, he was received at the same Penitentiary under sentences of two and ten years for burglary. On May 17, 1936, this individual as Frank Reed, was fined $10.50 and given ten days at Columbia, South Carolina, on charges of drunk and loitering. Fingerprint cards showed that the deceased had two sisters, Mrs. Alice Griefe, 77th and Madison Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri, and Mrs. W. A. Gillmore, living at 823 Wheeling Street, Tulsa, Oklahoma.

On September 20, 1936, a telegram was dispatched to the Chief of Police, Columbus, Georgia, notifying him of the identification of the unknown deceased and giving pertinent identifying data contained in the fingerprint files of the Bureau. On the same day a letter was addressed to the Chief of Police, Columbus, Georgia, confirming the wire relative to the identity of the deceased man, together with a copy of the criminal record of this individual.

BUREAU COOPERATES WITH SCOTLAND YARD, LONDON, ENGLAND IN IDENTIFYING VICTIM OF AMNESIA BY FINGERPRINTS

The Bureau recently was able to assist Scotland Yard, London, England in identifying an unknown victim of amnesia whose fingerprints were forwarded to the Bureau by Scotland Yard and received in the Identification Division of the Bureau on September 14, 1936 together with a photograph of the unknown victim.

Upon searching the fingerprints through the files of the Identification Division, they were found to be identical with the fingerprints of Robert Saunders, #127210, arrested by the Police Department, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania on May 23, 1932, on a charge of suspicious character. Information appearing on the fingerprint card received in the Bureau from the Philadelphia Police Department reflected that Saunders was born in England and his nationality English. His residence was given as Los Angeles, California.

Inquiries made by the Bureau revealed that Saunders, when arrested by the Police at Philadelphia in 1932, stated that he was wanted in Orange County, California for grand larceny, having stolen alcohol from the Orange County Hospital where he was employed. At the time of this arrest Saunders gave his address as 405 East Fifth Street, Los Angeles, California. It was ascertained that 405 East Fifth Street is the address of the Panama Hotel, a transient hotel in Los Angeles, California, but employees at the hotel were unable to identify Saunders' photograph and there was no record available in the hotel as to Saunders having resided there. Information at the Sheriff's Office, Orange County, California was to the effect that Saunders was formerly wanted by that office for theft of narcotics and robbery.

The above information as obtained from the files of the Identification Division of the Bureau from inquiries regarding Saunders was forwarded via cable on September 16, 1936 to the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, Fingerprint Branch, New Scotland Yard, London, England.
